Heavy rains stop search; school roof believed found

By Christian V. Esguerra, Jani Arnaiz and Jhunnex Napallacan

GUINSAUGON, ST. BERNARD, Southern Leyte-Amid heavy rain, Filipino authorities yesterday ordered a pullout of all rescuers digging in the spot where around 250 pupils and teachers are believed trapped inside a school building.

Continuous rains since early morning caused water rushing down the mountain to swell, prompting Maj. Gen. Bonifacio Ramos, overall ground commander of the rescue mission, to call off operations at the site at around 11 a.m.

"We temporarily suspended [operations] because of the heavy downpour," Ramos told reporters at around 2:30 p.m. "In fact, seven Taiwanese rescuers were stuck in the area."

An aerial survey, however, showed the rains had exposed a portion of a green roof believed to be that of the school building. Some 20 meters from the exposed roof, a computer, refrigerator, a lesson plan, notebooks, textbooks and pencil cases were found.

Capt. Roman Dioso, on-scene commander of the rescue operation, said freon leaked from the refrigerator when it was moved.

The area was very soft and wet, hence digging will only be at-tempted today after the rains shall have stopped. A St. Bernard councilor will be flown over the site to confirm if the green roof belonged to the school.

The decision to halt operations was made upon the recommendation of geologists stationed in the area, according to Lt. Col. Raul Farnacio, commander of the Filipino troops tapped for the rescue operation.

Despite the slowdown in the operations, seven more bodies were retrieved yesterday, bring-HEAVY/A19

ON FEB. 24, 1986, THE BELEAGUERED Perdinand Marcos called the rebels' Command Post at Camp Crame.

After speaking with Marcos, Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile passed the phone to Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, who said: "Manong Ferdie, this is Eddie." Soon Ramos was in tears.

Comelec gets P3.3B for automation

But Abalos rejects senators' condition

By Jerome Aning and Philip C. Tubeza

WHETHER THE SENAtors like it or not, the Commission on Elections as currently constituted would carry out the modernization of the country's electoral process once the budget is available, Comelec Chair Beniamin Abalos Sr. declared yesterday.

Abalos made the statement in a telephone interview as he rejected a condition imposed by the Senate, which approved the Comelec's 2006 budget of P3.3 billion on condition that Abalos and other officials implicated in the Mega Pacific scandal would stay away from the poll modernization program.

"They can't do that," Abalos said. "We will implement what the law says we have to imple-

Four other commissioners involved in the deal - Luzviminda Tancangeo, Raiph Lantion, Mehol Sadain and Rufino Javier - have already retired.

A fourth incumbent member of the Comelec, Romeo Brawner, took office last year and was not involved in the Mega Pacific

In approving the Comelec's 2006 budget last Wednesday, the Senate inserted a "special provision" stating that the funds for poll modernization should be used consistent with the Supreme Court decision voiding the "illegal and imprudent" Mega Pacific

Sen. Joker Arroyo, chair of the Senate Blue Ribbon Committee, noted that the court's ruling specified that Abalos and his fellow commissioners should "refrain from implementing any other contract or agreement entered into with regard to the (automated elections) project."

"If they continue in their job, we cannot have an automated election because the Supreme Court said that for so long as you guys are there, you cannot have anything to do with automated elections," Arroyo said.

We appropriated the P1.6 billion but there will be a special provision which says, in effect, that the disbursement of these funds will have to be consistent with the decision of the Supreme Court, which in turn means they are not the ones going to implement it," he added.

Abaios construed the Senate's condition to mean that the bidding and the purchasing of automation equipment would be conducted properly so it would not be questioned again

The senators told us that we should observe the [proper] bidding and purchasing procedures," he said.

Abalos insisted that the Mega Pacific deal was above board. He, Borra and Tuason have rejected repeated calls for their resigna-

The Ombudsman is already looking into the possible criminal liability of Abalos and other Comelec officials involved in the deal, a move senators hope would lead to their ouster from the election

The Senate Blue Ribbon Committee earlier said that if the commissioners do not resign, the "most feasible way" to remove them was for the Ombudsman to file criminal charges.

Cardinal Rosales calls for sacrifice

By Leila B. Salaverria

SPEAKING FOR THE FIRST TIME as a new cardinal of the Catholic Church, Manila Archbishop Gaudencio Rosales on Wednesday sounded a call for sacrifice to achieve unity in the country.

After an evening Mass at the Manila Cathedral celebrating the 40th anniversary of the Pocolare Movement in the Philippines, Rosales hailed the church organization for its goal of fostering unity in diversity.

He said this was what the country had been looking for.

"Is this not what our country needs? Unity... is this not exactly what our country is looking for? And if you think along that line, then I would say there is absolutely no unity and communion unless everyone makes a sacrifice of surrendering self, ambition, selfish interests no matter how good they think they are," said

Rosales, whose voice was hoarse from laryngitis.

Rosales also called on the people to pray for the country.

"Pray for our country still looking for unity and yet is not willing to make the sacrifice," he said. "Pray much, I'm sure we will find it one day not through the barrel of a gun, not through selfish ambition, not through plots, power or powerlessness, but only in the prayer and spirit of Jesus."

Rosales, who had set up the "Pondo ng Pinoy" project to raise funds for the poor, said his new designation would entail more service to the needy.

"I'm completely unworthy, I say woe to you that this added task or responsibility or work will not be honor but would mean greater service. That the many poor around us, so neglected by the powerful, may be attended to, recognized, loved and served," he

RP entrepreneurs are patriots – GMA

By Christine O. Avendaño and Elizabeth L. Sanchez

PRESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARroyo yesterday asked the country's entrepreneurs, whom she called "patriots," to reject politicking and the destabilization moves against her administration by "growing the economy through entrepreneurship and steadily denting poverty."

Speaking at the "Go Negosyo Summit" at Fort Bonifacio Global City in Taguig City, the President said: "Let us resolve to not let politicking or destabilization put down or destroy what we have here before us - the Filipino spirit of enterprise."

Speaking at the summir called by the Philippine Center for Entrepreneurship (PCE), the President said company executives were "more bullish" about the economy today than at any period based on a Central Bank poll last week,

That is optimistic; that is not being afraid," she said.

The President said she herself had opted to be optimistic about the "many trying times" she had faced as a public servant.

She said she never forgot what her then boss at the Department of Trade and Industry, businessman Jose Concepcion, had told her: "Believing you can do it is half being able to do it."

"(T)hat is optimism. And I've never forgotten that exhortation through the many trying times I've had as a public servant," she said.

The President also lauded the PCE for holding the summit yesterday, "as it becomes a part of our celebration of Edsa," referring to the 20th anniversary of the first People Power revolution this week.

She also announced that she had instructed Presidential Adviser on Jobs Creation Arthur Yap to talk to the Land Bank and the Development Bank of the Philippines to set aside P50 million as an "incubation fund" to help finance new entrepreneurs to be chosen by the PCE.

Kidnapped Taiwanese couple Malaysians to pay maids through banks rescued by 'people power'

By Tonette Orejas PDI Central Luson Desk

CAMP OLIVAS, PAMPANGA-LIU Kuo-shi bowed his head and placed his right hand on his chest in a gesture of gratitude, which he and his wife Hoduan Chin were unable to do in their rush to safety after 300 residents of a Zambales coastal village rescued them from kidnappers two days ago.

"At first they mistook us for thieves or for running away from our bills because we jumped out of the window of our cottage," the 56-year-old Taipeibased trader told police through an interpreter. "When they understood that we were kidnapped, they came to our rescue. They encircled us, protected us from our pursuing kidnappers. That's how we managed to escape."

Senior Supt. Arrazed Subong, deputy chief of the Zambales police, confirmed the rescue of the Taiwanese couple by villagers of Felmida Diaz in the municipality of Cabangan around 7 a.m. last Wednesday.

Liu and his wife were turned over to representatives of the Taiwan Economic and Cultural Office here on Ninoy Aguino International Airport on the night of Feb. 19 and were subsequently hidden in a cottage rented by the kidnappers at the Galinato Beach Resort in Zambales.

"The couple managed to get the attention of the residents when they screamed and did sign language that they were in trouble. Others understood simply from the panic in the faces Central Luzon police director, told reof the Lius," Subong told the Incomes.

The residents swarmed around the Taiwanese couple, making it impossible for three of the alleged kidnappers suspects to get near them, Subong said, recalling the scene when he arrived at the village. He said the police were at the scene five minutes after Barangay Captain Genardo Ofunda and Mayor Jesse Mendigorin called for help.

Although unable to speak a word of English, the couple were profuse in their gratitude to the villagers.

"We are thankful to them," Liu said through an interpreter.

"I feel relaxed now," Liu's 59-yearold wife said, forcing a smile.

da was rushed yesterday to the San Juan Medical Center after complaining of severe pain in his left eye.

The 68-year-old Estrada, who is detained in his sprawling rest house in Tanny, Rizal while facing plunder charges before the Sandiganbayan Special Division, was brought to the hospital overland after 3 p.m. by his Philippine National Police guards.

According to his physician, Dr. Lorenzo Hocson, the conjunctival cysts in the former president's left eye is causing an eye irritation hence the pain. He said the cysts, which were also found in the right eye, will have to be surgically removed stressing that Estrada's condition is not life threatening.

"We did not remove that cyst in his FORMER PRESIDENT JOSEPH ESTRA- left and right eyes when he was operated earlier this month to avoid any complication and also in the hope that we can reduce its size through medication," Horson, in a brief interview, said.

Estrada, underwent surgery at the SJMC on Feb. 2 to remove excess eyelid skin in his right eye which aggravated an eye infection brought about by an insect bite.

Hocson said Dr. Amadeo Veloso of the Asian Eye Institute will conduct the eye operation. He added that it was Veloso who successfully treated Estrada's cataract problem in 2004.

Lawyer Jose Alberto Flaminiano, a member of Estrada's legal defense team, said they have a pending motion before the Special Division asking permission for Estrada's hospitalization.

"But because of the severe pain, we decided to immediately bring him to the hospital."

A member of the Sandiganbayan Sheriff's Office, who asked not to be named, said that in emergency cases, there is no need for a court order since there is a standing directive allowing the PNP to bring Estrada to the hospital in emergency cases.

Early this week, Estrada's US based doctor, Christopher Mow, gave the former president a clean bill of health although he emphasized that Estrada's condition should be closely monitored for any infection.

Mow said an infection could severely affect Estrada's knee surgery and his ability to testify in court.

Indon 'intel' says JI terror network splintered

JAKARTA, INDONESIA — THE JEMAAH IS-lamiyah terror network survived the death of its master bomb-maker last year, and is now splintered into independent cells that continue to train and recruit suicide bombers in Indonesia, according to a confidential intelligence report.

The document, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press, says senior figures in the organization have "ongoing links" with fellow militants in Afghanistan, the Philippines and Thailand as well as those in jail inside Indonesia.

Jernaah Islamiyah, which once had cells throughout Southeast Asia and allegedly received funding from al-Qaida, is blamed in a score of bloody bombings and failed plots in the region, including five suicide bombings in Indonesia that together killed more than 240 people.

Authorities have arrested scores of the group's operatives in the last four years, and in November police killed Azahari Husin, a top leader who allegedly made many of the bombs used in the attacks, during a raid on his hideout.

The report said that after Azahari's death, Jemaah Islamiyah went further underground, forming small cells of terrorists comprising mostly of young people recruited through Islamic study groups.

The cells are called "Thaifah Mansurah" (or Winning Team), and operate independently, according to the 33-page document, which was drafted earlier this month.

"Thaifah Mansurah' are the main resource for JI when it is looking for suicide bombers," the report said.

Noordin Top, the group's alleged operational chief and head recruiter, remains at large.

Nasir Abbas, who was a key Jemaah Islamiyah operative until his arrest in 2003, told The AP that the new, loose structure of the group would make it even harder for police to track down Noordin.

"If police caught a regional head, it's unlikely he could identify other members of the group, or reveal the whereabouts of Noordin," said Abbas, who now works with authorities.

government officials led by former President Corazon Aquino. The timing of the meeting, which happened on the first day of the 20th anniversary of Edsa I, speaks for itself, according to Representatives Douglas Cagas of Davao del Sur and Lorna Silverio of Bulacan.

"These groups and individuals cannot deny that they are up to something with a political end. Anti-GMA (President Macapagal-Arroyo) forces tried but failed in July to oust the President and they might try their luck again this time." said Cagas, head of the House conhingent in the electoral tribunal.

Among those who attended the meeting were Ayala Corp. chief Jaime Augusto Zobel de Ayala, El Shaddai leader Bro. Mike Velarde and members of the Hyatt 10, a group of Cabinet members and other high officials who resigned last year and called on Ms Arroyo to do the same.

The resignation was triggered by the wiretapped conversations between Ms Arroyo and former Election Commissioner Virgilio Garcillano allegedly involving a conspiracy to rig the 2004 presidential election.

MBC Executive Director Guillermo Luz said the group believed in has refused to identify the election official she said she talked to.

Sense of urgency

Former Education Secretary Plorencio Abad, a member of the Hyatt 10, said the meeting was convened because of the sense of urgency that the political crisis had to be resolved soon.

'They don't have the right to [ram down] the people's throats what they want (such as) their plan to instigate People Power against the President," said Silverio.

Silverio found it "unfortunate" that Aquino, the "widow catapulted to power by Edsa I," had met with "groups posturing as power blocs' like the Hyatt 10 and a few MBC members.

"They should respect the celebration of the Edsa I anniversary by engaging in prayers for our country that we may finally attain national unity and progress," she said.

Just follow law

House Majority Leader Prospero C. Nograles belittled the attempt of "high-power groups" to end the lingering political crisis brought about by allegations that Ms Arroyo stole the vote in the 2004 election and that members the search for truth. The President of the First Family had received hefty "jueteng" kickbacks.

"There is no cause for alarm. All they--Aquino, El Shaddai Leader Bro. Mike Velarde, big businessmen, Hyatt 10-need to say is that they are totally against violence and change must be constitutional. Just follow the law," said Nograles.

He then appealed to Aquino and other critics of Ms Arroyo not to allow military adventurists to take over because that will abolish civilian supremacy.

'It will become a government of men and not of laws. They will abolish all democratic structures and rule through the barrel of the gun. It's worse than the cure they propose," said Nograles, a staunch advocate of Charter change.

Rich and powerful

Cagas said the meeting was the "latest guise of the opposition plot to seize power from the duly elected President."

He reminded those who attended the Makati meeting that just because they were rich and influential "they now have the right to insist on the people what they want of to seek to dictate the course of the country's fate."

Any attempt to unseat the President would fail because the people "will not listen to instigators of chaos and revolt. They are discerning enough to know that these anti-Arroyo forces want the President out to pursue their own agenda and not the interest of the people," Cagas said.

Cagas warned coup plotters that any power grab would not succeed without the people's support.

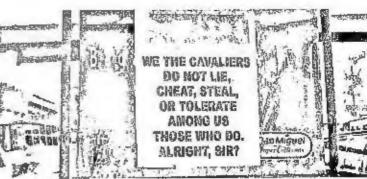

Silverio noted that except for Velarde, those at the meeting, including Aquino, had no mass-based support.

Improper

Ms Arroyo's allies in the House also criticized militant groups which observed the start of the Edsa I anniversary with a massive march that ended at the People Power Monument on Wednesday.

Surigao del Sur Rep. Prospero Pichay, a member of Ms Arroyo's Lakas-CMD party, said using the commemoration of the first People Power event to discredit the administration was far from the spirit of Edsa.

"Defying the cops in their Edsa march, throwing trash at the [monument), and answering the call of nature right then and there are very improper in commemorating a historic event like Edsa 1," Pichay said.

MAGDALO posters on MRT column along Edsa.

Rebel soldiers challenge superiors in Edsa posters

By Dona Pazzibugan

REBEL SOLDIERS HAVE FOUND a new way to convince fellow soldiers to turn their backs on President Macapagal-Arroyo.

Posters bearing what appear to be two versions of the "Magdalo" flag were plastered on a section of Edsa near Cubao, Quezon City, on Wednesday night.

Underneath the flags, written in bold letters, was the Philippine Military Academy [PMA] Cadet's Honor Code: "We the cavaliers do not lie, cheat, steal or tolerate among us those who do."

Then it ended with the challenge, "Alright, sir?"

The military so far has no idea who is behind the posters, which are obviously addressed to PMA graduates who are occupying top military and police posts.

The Cader's Honor Code is strictly upheld among cadets through their four years of training.

Once a cadet is challenged, "Alright, sir?" the cadet has to admit whether he had committed or knew of anyone who had committed any infraction of their regulations. A cadet who replies, "Alright, sir!" is presumed to be innocent of any wrongdoing.

The posters bore two flags side by side. One was the flag used by the Oakwood mutiny leaders who called themselves the "Magdalo" group—a red flag with the letter "I" insignia in the center.

The other flag, also red, bore the letters "M-K-P" around a rising sun. The letters in yellow ink supposedly stand for Makabayang Kawal Pilipino, according to military officials.

It looked like the flag which Army chief Lt. Gen. Hermogenes Esperon claimed was supposedly recovered from captured Magdalo leader 1st Lt. Lawrence San Juan, except that the letters "MKP" in San Juan's flag were written in black.

These were the same posters that were put up near the entrance to the PMA compound in Baguio City during the alumnihomecoming on Feb. 18.

Littering

Col. Tristan Kison, spokesperson of the military, tried to make light of the posters, saying the military would not go to the trouble of tearing them down.

"We'll leave it up to the MMDA [Metro Manila Development Authority] to remove them. That's littering," he said.

Kison grudgingly admitted that the posters and the challenge "Alright, sir?" were obviously addressed to military officials who stand by Ms Arroyo despite allegations she cheated in the 2004 elections.

He said while those behind the posters enjoyed freedom of expression, "we ask the public to be discerning. This is another way of courting the support of the Armed Forces."

captured the "prime movers."

Many of them have joined us and have returned to their units. A few of them are now restrained [to quarters]," Esperon said.

Esperon said the 14 officers confessed to attending conferences in December 2003, in 2004 and in 2005 in different hotels in Makati, talking about reorganizing Magdalo and launching "Oplan Hackle."

The Magdalo group staged a mutiny in 2003. Esperon described Oplan Hackle as a plan to overthrow the Arroyo administration.

But according to Kison, the 14 junior officers may not have been deeply involved in the coup plot. What will you charge them with?" he told reporters. Reminded that Esperon spoke about a recruitment ritual and dog rags supposedly given to recruited officers, Kison said: "Having a dog tag is not an offense." 'lt's not clear what their participation is. They are part of Oplan Hackle's recruitment. The first phase is recruitment," the military spokesperson said.

Kison said no other officers were brought in for questioning.

'Captain Batingaw'

Also yesterday, a man who claimed to be an Air Force captain called up the dzBB radio station and ridiculed Esperon's claim that the military had uncovered the coup plot code-named Oplan Hackle.

"We are laughing at him. My God, since you're making up a story, why don't you come up with a good story?" said the man who identified himself as "Captain Batingaw," which is Filipino for a big bell.

He said rebel soldiers were determined to overthrow Ms Arroyo.

"[The coup] will happen suddenly. Time will come, quietly and swiftly," said the man, who claimed he was with the "Magdiwang" faction of the rebel soldiers.

"We have to be loyal to the Filipino people, not to a single Presidem who is doing nothing at all," he said,

Opportunists

Air Porce spokesperson Lt. Coi. Restituto Padilla doubted the caller was an Air Force officer, saying the Air Force had no "Captain Batingaw" on its rolls.

"He's entitled to his own opin- Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

ion. He's just an opportunist who vis' grabbing the limelight. The bulk of the Armed Forces is loyal to the Constitution," Padilla said.

Following the airing of "Capatain Batingaw's" threat of a coup, Malacañang said it would grack down on rebel soldiers issuing threats and anti-Arroyo rhetoric on radio.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita said he had ordered an investigation of the radio broadcasts of fugitive soldiers.

"We know that they are just impostors and probably the radio stations that aired them have also started their own investigations because they were fooled," Ermita said at a briefing.

Ermita cited two radio interviews with Lt. Lawrence San Juan aired Wednesday morning in which the Magdalo leader urged residents near Malacañang to evacuate because of bomb attacks his group planned to launch this week.

San Juan was interviewed at 6:05 a.m. but Ermita claimed the police had captured the Magdalo leader at 5:45 a.m. "In other words there are plenty of Lt. San

"We think this is just propaganda of the impostors," Ermita said.

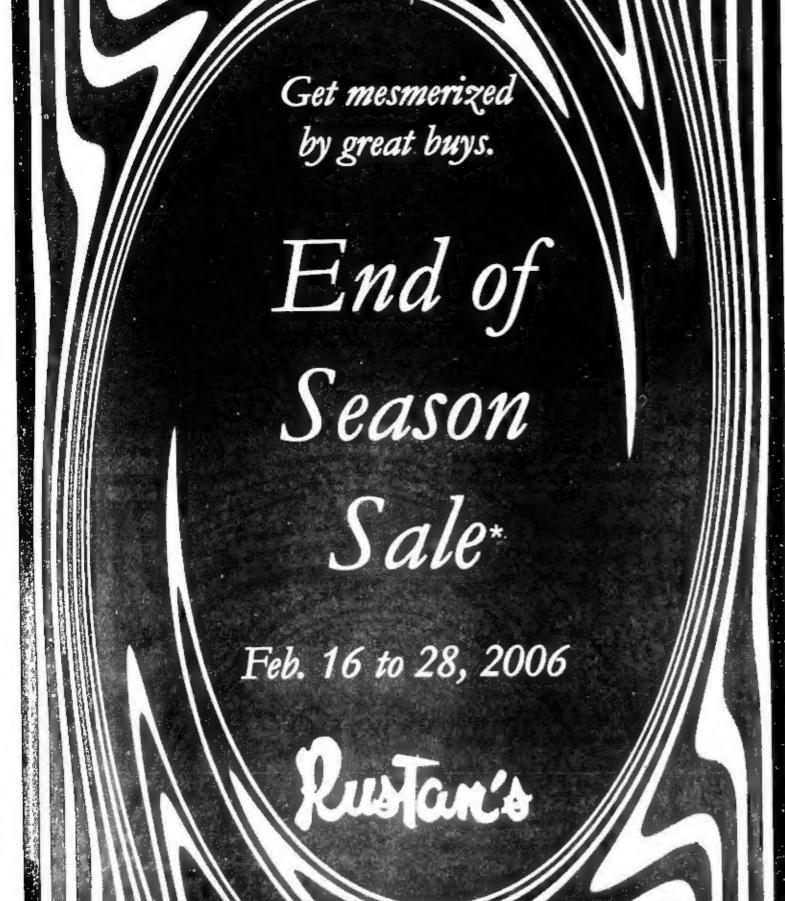

Ermita urged the media to use their experience in determining whether their sources were who they said they were, "You should be able to determine things like this and avoid being misled," Ermita said.

But radio station managers interviewed by the Inquirer disputed Malacañang's claim that the San Juan interviews they aired were fake,

A news manager of a leading broadcast station said all guests on their news programs were screened thoroughly, and were asked background questions before going on air.

Another radio station official said that his staff would check other sources to confirm whether a source was for real. In San Juan's case, the station official said the staff called up the Magdalo lawyer, Ruel Pulido, to confirm whether the source was for real.

Both officials said they were not buying the Palace line that their ' sources were impostors considering that the police had no proof that San Juan had been captured before the interview. With a report from

SC upholds ban on used car imports

IT IS ILLEGAL TO IMPORT USED cars and other vehicles into the country other than through the Subic Special Economic Zone, the Supreme Court has ruled, upholding Executive Order No. 156 which bans the importation of used cars into the Philippines.

In a Feb. 21 ruling, the high court, however, imposed strict limitations on the importation of used vehicles, including the provision that they "may only be stored, used or traded, or exported out of the Philippine territory, but (they) cannot be imported into the Philippines outside of the secured fenced-in former Subic Naval Base area,"

The court, in effect, modified earlier rulings of the Olongapo Regional Trial Court and the Court of Appeals nullifying portions of EO 156, rulings that had prompted the Office of the Executive Secretary to bring the matter before the Supreme Court.

In its 26-page ruling, the high tribunal said the prohibition on the importation of used vehicles was "valid insofar as it applies... outside the fenced-in former Subic Naval Base area."

Exceptions

Under EO 156, the only exceptions to the absolute ban on the importation of used motor vehicles are vehicles owned by returning residents which should be covered by an authority to import. Such vehicles can-sales due to the massive impornot be resold for at least three tation of used motor vehicles,

Likewise exempted from the ban are vehicles of the diplomatic corps and trucks, excluding pickups, buses and special purpose vehicles like fire trucks, ambulances and hearses.

The EO prompted three groups of vehicle importers-including the Motor Vehicle Importers Association of Subic Bay Preeport Inc.-to bring the matter before the Olongapo court.

In the decision penned by Justice Consuelo Ynares-Santiago, the Supreme Court said that "contrary to the conclusions of the Court of Appeals, EO 156 is actually . . . a valid administrative" act with "constitutional and statutory bases."

Provisions

The court cited relevant provisions of the 1987 Constitution and statutes, such as the Tariff and Customs Code, the Omnibus Investment Code of the Philippines and Republic Act No. 8800, otherwise known as the Safeguard Measures Act.

There are thus explicit constitutional and statutory permission authorizing the President to ban or regulate the importation of articles and commodities into the country," the SC said.

President Macapagal-Arroyo issued EO 156 in 2002 in a bid to rationalize the importation of used motor vehicles and to boost domestic car produc-

AN ARMED Iraqi takes part in a rally in reaction to the explosion Wednesday which heavily damaged the golden dome of one of Iraq's most famous Shiite religious shrines.

BAGHDAD-FIFTY-THREE PEOPLE WERE KILLED leaders to accept Sunnis in a nain Baghdad in the 24 hours since the bombing of a major Shiite shrine sparked the worst sectarian violence the country has seen since the fall of Saddam Hussein, police said on Thursday.

Gunmen sprayed a Sunni Egyptians, from a prison in the mosque in the city of Baquba, northeast of the capital, killing one person in the latest of dozens of such incidents that have left religious and political leaders scrambling to halt a descent into all-out civil war.

Most of the people killed in Baghdad were Arab Summis who were attacked at mosques, police said.

Three journalists working for Al-Arabiya television were found shot dead after being attacked while filming in Samarra, where the bloodless but highly symbolic bombing of the Golden Mosque at dawn on Wednesday provoked widespread protest.

In the bloodiest apparent reprisal for the attack on one of Shiite Islam's holiest sites, men in police uniform seized 12 Sunni rebel suspects, including two mainly Shiite city of Basra and killed 11 of them.

President Jalal Talabani summoned leaders of all sides to a summit at 10:30 a.m. after the bombing provoked outrage among majority Shiites that surpassed the anger caused by thousands of killings by Sunni militants since US forces toppled Saddam's Sunni-dominated government three years ago.

One man just stood silently inside the gutted Abdel Rahman mosque in central Baghdad. A veiled woman said she saw assailants throw grenades at the Sunni mosque and then open fire and set it alight. It was one of several badly damaged overnight.

US President George W. Bush, whose diplomats and military commanders are pressing Shiite tional unity government after they took part in an election in December, urged Iraqis not to rise to the bait of what US and Iraqi officials called an al-Qaida attempt to fuel civil strife.

Violence will only contribute to what the terrorists sought to achieve," he said in a statement, as 130,000 US troops stood by to back up lrag's new security forces and keep order.

A policeman guarding a Sunni mosque in the southern Shiite city of Diwaniya was killed in an attack by Shiite militants.

Three Sunni clerics were among those killed on Wednesday.

The United Nations Security Council, rarely able to find a common voice on Iraq since its bitter divisions over the US invasion in 2003, sounded a note of alarm in calling on Iraqis to rally behind a non-sectarian government.

The members of the Security Council understand the anguish caused by the attacks but urge the people of Iraq to defy its perpetrators by showing restraint and uni-

Jacques Langevin, Christian Martinez and Fabrice Chassery were acquitted of the invasion of privacy charge in 22003 after judges said a crashed vehicle on a public highway is not a private area. Vietnamese refugee in $350-M jackpot

CHICAGO-A Vietnamese refugee bought the ticket that claimed the biggest US lottery win ever recorded at a whopping $365 million. Dung Tran, 34, will share his winnings with seven co-workers from the Lincoln, Nebraska meat processing plant where he has worked since arriving in the United States 16 years ago. Tran was one of three winners who continued to go to work after they learned on Saturday night that they had won the lottery. But like most in his group, he said he did not plan on working much longer. The eight winners chose to take a cash option of $177.3 million instead of getting the full $365 million paid in 30 annual installments. They will each receive about $15.5 million after state and federal taxes are with-; held.

Bush unaware about deal that handed over US ports

WASHINGTON-PRESIDENT George W. Bush did not know about a deal to hand over operations at six major US ports to an Arab company until after his administration had approved it, the White House said on Wednesday.

Surprised by a backlash from Bush's own Republican Party, the White House said it was a mistake not to explain to Congress the addecried by lawmakers as a risk to national security.

US Treasury Secretary John Snow also told reporters he did not know of the decision even though he chairs the committee that approved the sale of British-based P&O to Dubai Ports World based in the United Arab Emirates.

A BALD eagle in a nature reserve in Spain. The European Union gave a green light on Wednesday to plans by France and the Netherlands to vaccinate millions of hens, ducks and geese against bird flu.

Bird flu bits Europe's poultry for first time

VIENNA-THE DEADLY H5N1 form of bird flu was detected in poultry in the European Union for the first time, infecting two chickens in Austria, as the virus threatened to run rampant despite worldwide efforts to confine it.

india's health secretary on Wednesday suggested that humans were infected with bird flu on the subcontinent, as Nigeria battled to contain Africa's first outbreak of the virus, and the European Commission approved French and Dutch plans to vaccinate millions of their domestic fowl.

There is growing alarm in Europe over the rapid spread of the highly pathogenic H5N1 strain of the virus which has killed more than 90 people, mainly in Asia, as France last week became the sixth EU country to be hit.

The virus was discovered in a second wild duck found dead in the Ain region of southeast France, the Ministry of Agriculture announced early Thursday. It said in a statement that the duck was found in the village of Bouvent on Sunday, the day after the discovery of the first wild duck carrying the strain.

The Austrian cases are especially alarming to the EU's poultry industry, so far untouched by the epidemic, and to health officials worried about human infection.

Austrian health ministry spokesperson Danielle Retzek said the country's poultry infections were "an isolated case" since the animals that tested positive for H5N1 were in a refuge and not in a chicken farm where poultry are raised for commercial con-

Widely used supplements for arthritis of no use, says study

BOSTON-TWO FOOD NUTRItional supplements widely taken by consumers including US President George W. Bush for joint problems are no better than a placebo for treating arthritic pain in the knee, a study said.

But the study of glucosamine and chondroitin also suggested that combining them, rather than consuming one or the other, might help ease moderate to severe knee pain.

"The bottom line is, over all there wasn't any benefit over placebo," said Daniel Clegg of the University of Utah School of Medicine and the chief author of the study, which will appear in Thursday's edition of The New England Journal of Medicine.

He said the findings from tests at 16 medical centers also show that the supplements, either alone or in combination, are unlikely to stop the pain from developing in the first Consumers spend about $730 million a year on the supplements, usually hoping to find relief from a condition that afflicts at least 20 million people in the United States.

Past tests of the supplements, taken by millions of arthritis sufferers worldwide, have shown some benefit. But the rigor of some of those studies has been questioned.

The Council for Responsible Nutrition, a trade association that represents the dietary supplement industry, said Clegg's study revealed that the combination "provide significant pain relief for moderate to severe sufferers of osteoarthritis."

Clegg said that the council is focusing on the "interesting finding" in a subset of the study that only looked at volunteers whose pain was rated as moderate to severe.

Those people "did have a pretty

1,583 volunteers—was "not big enough to make definitive comments," so a further test would be needed to see if the benefits were real, Clegg said.

"We need to look more."

Por now, "there is no evidence that these agents prevent osteoarthritis in healthy persons or in persons with knee pain" whose knees have a normal-looking X-ray, said Marc Hochberg of the Univer-

Hochberg said it was clear that the two substances alone were no more effective than a placebo.

In the study, in which all volunteers had evidence of osteoarthritis and had been dealing with some degree of knee pain for a least six months, 60.1 percent of the people taking the placebo had a 20 percent decline in knee pain after 24 weeks.

The 'Marvelous 35' not accidental heroes

By Fe Zamora

THEY THOUGHT THEY would just walk out, have dinner and perhaps a drink and go home.

That they would end up among the "accidental heroes" of the 1986 Edsa Revolution two weeks later never crossed their apolitical minds.

The image of the 35 computer techniclans in white blazers, walking out solemnly from the Plenary Hall of the Philippine International Convention Center (PICC) on the night of Peb. 9, 1986, was a living testimony that "truth is mightier than deception."

Their statement to the media at the Baclaran Church later that night also bolstered suspicions the Ferdinand Marcos would use all tricks possible to win at all

But the dictator had apparently underestimated these young and idealistic technicians from the National Computer Center. They were hired to develop the computerized tabulation system, but refused to tabulate fabricated election results.

Project manager Myrna "Shiony" Asuncion-Binamira said they had been monitoring the "discrepancies" since Feb. 8, but they thought the glitch was caused by a "bug" in the computer system.

Dignity non-negotiable

When it became obvious that the "discrepancy" was not in the program but orchestrated by some superior officials to favor one candidate, they were furious. They also felt betrayed, Binamira told the INCUREAL

With co-project manager Linda Kapunan, Binamira went over the tabulation reports that the programmers said did not tally with the results on the tabulation board. Kapunan's husband then, Col. Red Kapunan, was one of the key leaders of the Reform the Armed Forces Movement, or RAM, which spearheaded the Edsa uprising. They are now separated.

"Our dignity is non-negotiable. So what are we going to do about it?" Kapunan asked them.

Basically cyber professionals without political leanings, Jane Rosales-Yap said their reaction was very simple. "We wanted to get out, eat and go home," she said.

"We did not want ourselves to be used in any way that violates hundamental professional ethics, that's why we walked out," Binamira added.

Honor roll

When Kapunan said "now," Cooly Culiat-Medina, Alice Torres and 33 others just

"THE WALKOUTERS"—23 of the original 35 computer programmers now live abroad—hold a reunion 20 years later on Feb. 9 by retracing their steps from the PICC plenary half to Bacharan Church where they drafted their statement and held a press conference. picked up their belongings and walked single-file toward the middle aisle, passing by the press gallery. Of the group, five were males and the rest were females.

The "walkouters" also included Emie Alberto, Marisa Briones-Allarey, Marissa Almendral, Gie Antonio-Silva, Rory Asuncion, Bot Bautista, Erlyn Barza, Thess Baltazar-Roberto, Mina Bergara, Nori Bolado, Zoe Castro, Charles Chan, Achie Concepcion-Jimenez, Erick Celestino, Marissa Contreras-Legaspi, Maleen Cruz-Ngan, Dennie Estolas-Vista, Bambi Flor-Sena, Naz Gutierrez, Luchie Lavin, Mario Lavin, Rubi Macato-Slater, Euly Molina-Legro, Nitro Palomares-Castro, Maite de Rivera, Bing Romero-Justo, Vangie Saludares, Irma Sunico-Bumo, Jules Valderrama and Celine Vinoya-Rivera.

To their surprise, the media jumped at them and followed. Blinding flashbuibs met them in the corridor. Tape recorders and microphones were thrust into their faces. Journalists yelled: "What happened? Why are you doing this?"

The walkout turned into a nightmare. "We were shocked," Binamira recalled. When somebody shouted "secure them," Torres remembered feeling a sudden chill in her spine. "Secure us from what?" she wondered.

"Like death was in the air," Yap added. Kapunan had earlier arranged for vehicles for 15 people. When 35 joined the walk, they just packed themselves into the vehicles. But where to go? Nobody knew.

They finally ended at Baclaran church where they held a press conference later that night.

In a statement which they painstak- the Filipino people.

ingly prepared at the church, the technicians said they were protesting violation of their professional ethics.

They also maintained they didn't have a leader, no political affiliation and definitely were not pro-Cory Aquino.

Betrayal of trust

They would later say on their blog http://walkouters.blogspot.com that "it hurt us to see a deliberate betrayal of trust. And it did not matter who was winning or losing: cheating, whether by 1 or 100,000, is still cheating."

On Peb. 9, exactly 20 years later, 14 out of the 35 "walkouters" retraced their steps from the PICC to Baclaran and finally at the Cenacle Retreat House in Quezon City where they stayed for two weeks.

23 live abroad

Kapunan, who has remarried and lives in Sydney, Australia, joined the reunion, along with Medina, who is based in Guam. Binamira said 23 of the original group now live abroad.

But the idealism lives on.

If they were thrown in the same situation again, they said they would have done the same thing.

In fact, when Yap first heard the controversial tapped conversation between President Arroyo and former Comelec Commissioner Virgilio Garcillano, she cried.

Ordinary people, small people can do a lot if they stand up for truth," she said.

The 1986 "Marvelous 35" refused to participate in cheating. They took a leap of faith, and they landed in the arms of

THE PEOPLE

We stopped a rebel convoy

By Danilo Villarante

Y FRIENDS-FERdie Abesamis, Beng Novales, Edgar and Joyce Esguerra-and I were listening to Radio Bandido when June Kiethley raised an alarm about a Metrocom convoy on Edsa moving toward ABS-CBN, then held by rebel forces.

It is a short distance from our place in Kamias, Quezon City, so we dashed to the area in two cars and positioned ourselves on Bohol Avenue near the corner of Scout Borromeo to barricade the street. A couple more vehicles joined us.

Within 15 minutes, we saw this slow moving military convoy led by a Lancer car followed by an armored personnel carrier and two trucks of soldiers turning right to Bohol Avenue.

"Ayan na! Ayan na!" we screamed. From that moment, we couldn't do anything but follow tensely the convoy moving closer and closer until it stopped in front

The driver of the lead vehicle, Lt. Rene Cruz, came out to talk to Ferdie, our negotiator.

He informed us that they came from Camp Crame and were sent to augment and relieve the rebel forces holding ABS-CBN, Much to our relief, the story was true. We didn't stand a chance against their firepower.

Before leaving Bohol Avenue, we hauled steel beams from a nearby compound and laid them on the street. A company nearby parked its dump trucks beside the steel beams. Any vehicle coming in had to take a slow zigzag drive to ABS-

We still have a big laugh when we recall the day we stopped a rebel convoy. It was a wonderfully crazy day!

at MFA because it was still open for the signatures of MFA personnel. We were able to persuade the sentries at Camp Crame to let us in on foot.

Ralph asked to see Enrile. Enrile read the statement and remarked that the signatures of some assistant ministers were missing. Did that mean that those AsMins were pro-Marcos? Vic said that because of traffic and communication disruptions, those AsMins were not able to report to office or could not be contacted. Enrile promised to give the statement to President Aguino.

Back in the office, I drafted a curt note to the diplomatic corps, initialed by Ralph, informing them that "Mrs. Corazon C. Aquino and Mr. Salvador H. Laurei have taken their oaths of office as President and Vice President of the Philippines, respectively," and requesting the ambassadors and heads of mission to Inform their respective governments accordingly." Special couriers were sent to deliver the note. The Foreign Service was also instructed accordingly.

Extraordinary times

I soon received a call from the Netherlands Embassy's No. 2 man, Mr. Peter Pairhe, who had been instructed by his ambassador to check with me. For reasons of protocol, I should have asked to talk with Ambassador Wieger Hellema himself, but these were extraordinary times.

Relations between the foreign ministry and the European ambassadors had deteriorated ever since they attended the funeral services for former Sen. Benigno "Ninoy" Aquino.

The then chair of the ambassadors of the European Community-1 think it was the Prench-had called on acting Poreign Minister Castro as a matter of courtesy and informed him that the European ambassadors would attend the funeral. Castro was not one to take this lying down. He reminded the ambassador that they were accredited to the head of state and not to Cardinal Sin or Mrs. Aquino. Nevertheless, the European ambassadors did attend the funeral rites. From then on, all important matters needing some personal attention were done through me as assistant minister for European affairs. Castro barely talked with the European ambassadors and the ambassadors were quite happy with this arrangement.

This was my exchange with Mr. Palthe. He asked, "Who is in charge of MFA?" As-Min Gonzales who initialed the note in your hands. "How about AFM Castro?" He is not here, but he supports us. "How about the Philippine Army troops under Gen. [Roland] Pattugalan in Pasig?" They will not fire against the people. The Aquino forces are in full control of the whole country. "How about President Marcos?" I do not know what his plans are.

Ambassadors knew more

When Mr. Paithe asked me about the troops under General Patrugalan in Pasig, I was surprised at his knowledge of events. But, as I was to find out later when I accompanied each of the European ambassadors when they paid courtesy calls on President Aquino and Vice President Laurel, they knew more than I did about what was going on in the Philippines. They were in contact with opposition leaders long before Erisa to the point of familiarity with Cory and Dox.

Mr. Palthe then said that the Netherlands had just assumed the chairmanship of the European Community, that a meeting of the European foreign ministers had been scheduled for the next day at The Hague, and that the foreign ministers would be informed of the contents of the MFA note. Indeed the following day, the EC foreign ministers issued from The Hague a strong statement welcoming the change of government in Manila.

Late that afternoon, Castro phoned. I said I thought he was in Tokyo. "I could not proceed because the airport was closed," he said.

I asked him If he had been at the Marcos oath-taking in Malacafiang that mornlike to request something of you, as one colleague of another," Castro said.

Flying to exile

What is it? I said. That we treat each other decently." Sure, no problem about that. "Will you allow me to go to my office to pack my things? I have been told that security is very tight and I would not want to suffer the humiliation of being turned away by the guards." No problem as far as I am concerned, but you must talk with Ralph, I said.

At around 9 o'clock that night, helicopters left Malacañang to ferry the Marcoses to Clark Air Base. Before 10 p.m., the Marcoses and their entourage were flying to exile in Honolulu.

Wednesday, February 26

The following morning I saw acting Foreign Minister Pacifico Castro in his office, now gloomy and deserted where before it was a hub of activity. He was packing his papers, books and personal memorabilia. A foreigner from a news agency was doing a filmed interview with him, a backgrounder, not for immediate broadcast.

"Your Ministry was one of the props of the Marcos dictatorship. You defended it abroad and showed it in rosy colors." That is our job.

"Were you aware of the civil rights violations, the killings and torture of innocent civilians under Mr. Marcos?" Our Supreme Court had ruled time and again that President Marcos's was the legitimate administration. The Supreme Court dismissed on the merits all the cases brought against Mr. Marcos. "Please do not talk of legalities. The Supreme Court was blind, but you are an intelligent man, your diplomats are intelligent men, did you not see the corruption, profitgacy, rapaciousness, atrochies committed by the Marcoses, which are now coming to light in droves?" We only followed orders.

The Nuremberg defense. I thought, does Castro not know that this defense did not work for the Nazis? But then, ing. "No, I have a stomach upset. I would what other defense can we diplomats use? We are far from the scene and therefore see no evil and hear no evil.

We were called to the lobby. Vice President Salvador Laurel was coming to take up his post as foreign minister. Castro positioned himself nearest the door, as in a reception line. Everyone avoided him. I stood next to Castro and made small talk. The indonesian ambassador arrived, nodded to Castro, shook hands with me, and made a beeline for Ralph Gonzales's office. A snub, if ever there was one. Castro suffered many of them and that was why I stood beside him, trying to shield him.

Fallen warrior

Palse alarm! Laurel was not coming after all. Castro said, 'Johnny, please come with me. Let us say goodbye to the staff." We made the rounds of the offices. Castro quickly shook hands with each employee. Thank you for your cooperation during my tenure." The employees were close to tears and could not speak. Castro had often been hard on them but now that he was down, they seemed to sympathize with the fallen warrior. Thursday, February 27

"VP Laurel is coming!" This time it was for real. Castro again positioned himself at the door. When Laurel arrived with his entourage, Castro welcomed him, introduced himself as the acting foreign minister. He then stayed put to the left of Laurel and no one could dislodge him from that position.

We had hardly seated ourselves and collected our thoughts when Castro began his formal words of welcome. He again introduced himself as the acting foreign minister and said he was turning over to Vice President Laurel an intact and efficient Ministry of Poreign Affairs and Poreign Service. He said he would give his wholehearted cooperation to the new administration and Laurel could count on him. He gave Laurel the 1983 Revised Philippine Poreign Service Code-a really important handiwork of Castro-and several publications of the Foreign Service Institute so the Vice President "would have a good concept of [the] MFA's work and capabilities."

Laurel thanked Castro and assured the officers and employees that they would be treated fairly by the new administration, and that he was counting on their support for the good of the country.

So ended the reign of AFM Castro. Gracefully, as in the Appomattox Courthouse, and with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs indisputably united.

(Appomattox is the town in Virginia where the Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee surrendered to Gen. Ulysses Grant on April 9, 1865, ending the American Civil War) So also ended the reign of Ralph Gonzales, without so much as a brief mention. Ignored altogether. Congratulations to the master tactician AFM Castro. But my admiration goes also to Raiph who did not put up a fight for the limelight. Both of them had the good of the MFA at heart and they worked to preserve its integrity.

Urbanity, loyalty

In those last moments, was I pro-Castro or pro-Ralph? Castro had requested urbanity from me, hence my presence beside him. Ralph was not visible, so the question of loyalty did not arise.

I made a memorandum for the Vice President, recounting the action of the MFA visà-vis foreign countries. Deputy Foreign Minister Jose D. Ingles showed the memo to Castro. On the margin of the sentence where I wrote that I told Minister Palthe that Castro supported us-my intention in saying this was to save Castro's career-Castro made a handwritten note contradicting me: "I only said, 'We are colleagues. Let us treat each other with decency."

I am still an admirer of Castro, I am happy that thanks to Vice President Laurel, in spite of the animosities of the Edsa revolution, all of us, including Castro, were allowed to continue serving our country,

The crowd was thick in front of Crame's Gate 2. I could not turn right because of the barbed wire barricades. I requested the people leaning on the roadblock to give way, explaining that my presence as CDO was needed inside. I made the "T (or "Laban") sign with a smile They advised me to kill the engine, and pushed the jeep carefully until we reached Gate 1.

But the men from the Special Action Forces, in black fatigues and combat gear, refused to open it. I told them to inform their commanding officer, Maj. Reynaldo Velasco, that I was the CDO.

They quickly let me through, pushing out those who sneaked in behind the jeep. Except for the SAR, there were few military men inside. Some were wearing khaki uniforms but were unarmed.

I could not find the outgoing CDO. Brig. Gen. Jacinto Galang, PC chief of staff, instructed me to phone all duty officers and tell them to contact their men by any means and order them to come to Crame

People as strategy

I hurried to my office and assembled my staff to implement the order.

The PC Operation Center under Col. Alexander Aguirre was busy formulating strategies for the camp's defense.

The overall scheme was to create traffic jams/choke points; install roadblocks and obstacles of any kind, including big vehicles, on all approaches to Crame, arrange human barricades at all intersections; and seal every space on the ground to bar the movements of government troops

Friendly forces were also mobibzed to mount rallies on Mendiola and Nagtahan.

At the break of dawn I rushed from the HPC building to my office to change into my camouflage uniform.

Ver had given me the uniform when I was his assistant secretary at GHQ for more than three years. I remember telling him then that if I died wearing the uniform and my death was caused by the one who gave it to me, it would have historical value.

The remark flashed in my mind when I saw Ver on TV seeking authority to bomb Camp Crame if we did not surrender. (Marcos refused, saying he had no intention of hurting anyone.)

Before I left my office, the camp commander, Brig. Gen. Paterno Lomango, instructed me to get M-16 Armalites from his stockroom for my men.

We were 18 officers and men in all, including ex-Philippine Military Academy cadet John Castriciones, the son of my deputy who had come looking for his father. He served as my bodyguard and intelligence agent.

From the third floor of the HPC building, one could view the sea of humanity below, shouting with raised hands, forefingers and thumbs forming the "E sign.

Nuns and other sympathizers bearing food for the reformists were allowed entry into Crame

Blasted Radio Veritas

And then the Radio Veritas broadcast stopped. Our Command Post learned that loyalist forces had biasted the station transmitter in Malolos, Bulacan.

But Keithley soon came back on the air on another station.

Brig. Gen. Eduardo Ermita and Col. Honesto Isleta were very effective propagandists, continually supplying the radio stanon with the names of the units and commanders in the field.

Movements

The air was tense when Enrile, with Colonels Jose Almonte, Gregorio Honasan, Tirso Gador and Victor Erfe, and other security men, joined Ramos at Crame.

Ramos announced that the PMA had been abandoned by its superintendent. Representatives of each class soon arrived at Crame to confirm their defection.

He gave the same advice to Brig. Gen. Artemio Tadiaz who led a dozen tanks

Good newst Brig. Gen. Rodrigo Gutang, PC Recom 12 commander, said he had dispatched a contingency force-105 officers and men under Maj. Billy Bibit-aboard two Philippine Airlines planes.

Expected time of arrival: 3 p.m.

But the loyalists had control of the airport, and armored vehicles and Aviation Security Command personnel surrounded the contingency force the area with the 18 M16s he had isupon arrival. Bibit was forced to submit his men to avert a bloody face-off.

Marcos appeared on TV in a fit of anger, but proudly said he had foiled the group and would throw the captives to a remote island.

Mission to take Crame

So Tadiar and his Marines left Fort Bonifacio with the mission to take

People power moved into action, each group organized by a leader and employing its own strategy.

Flowers, cigarettes, snacks, even lunch packs, were offered to the tank crews with persuasive words, smiles and songs. Nuns bravely stood in front of the tanks.

And the muracle happened: The of Col. Antonio Sotelo, with the misloyalist forces turned back.

There was also an attempt to test-fire 81mm mortars placed behind the concrete fence at Aguinaldo Target: Crame.

But Col. Wilfredo Cruz, who manned the GHQ Operation Center, was a PC officer. He could not have his fellow constables annihilated.

At the end of the day we learned that US President Ronald Reagan's offer for asylum in the United States had been transmitted to Marcos, on condinon that he step down peacefully. There was also the unverified report that the Marcoses had left the Palace.

At the Command Post, Espino shed his shoes, stretched his feet, and rested his back on the wall. Golez sat down beside him

We also learned that the Air Force had been ordered to bomb Crame to force our surrender.

At about 6 a.m. Enrile told the Command Post that the bombing would start in about five minutes. "President Marcos expects us to decide to give up our cause. No more turning back," he said softly.

Ramos rose from his seat. "I suggest that some of us go down, especially the members of the media, to minimize casualties," he said, grimning.

'No turning back'

When Marcos called the Command Post, Enrile took the phone, listened, and said: "Mr. President, there is no more turning back. It is enough that I have served you for the last 20 years." Again he paused to listen. Then he said,

"No, we cannot make any commitment." "Here's Eddie," he said, and gave the phone

"Manong, this is Eddie," Ramos said, then stopped to listen. Soon, tears were trickling from his eyes.

The loyalist soldiers who tried to defend "No longer possible, no more turning back. We will find out from the Cory group. What I Channel 4 was under rebel control when can assure you is your safety and that of your family," Ramos said in a low tone.

He put the phone down, his face melancholy. Later, some members of the general and special staff whom we saw on TV with Ver arrived at the Command Post led by Commodore Serafio Martillano, the AFP deputy chief of staff, I also noted the presence of Rep.

Before nightfall Marcos appeared on TV, declaring a state of national emergency and imposing a curfew.

But the people defiantly remained on the streets. No one dared implement his order.

Candies, water delight ralliers

By Petra Vinteres

broke out, I was 62 years old and was trying to fig ure out how my business would survive, with orders from companies dwindling. I was into homemade sweets since I retired as a mathematics and physics professor.

From my home on Harvard Street, I walked 10 blocks to Edsa, carrying two plastic bags of candies and disposable cups. The street was full of people. Not a single vehicle could be seen

I borrowed a table from one of the houses. They not only gave me a table but also helped me spread the cups and sweets on it. I did not have to ask them to get water. They filled the cups with drinking water. We did not introduce ourselves to each other. We just automatically worked together.

I called the attention of the marching people to our service by throwing candles to them.

In an instant the table was empty. The girls brought the table back and I went marching with the people. There were many people on the sidewalk watching the marchers. Some of them who knew me waved and clapped their hands, amazed at seeing me marching, too

I did the same thing the next day. The girls at the same house knew me by then and when they saw me, they took out the table, laid down bottles of water, the cups and the sweets. After the table was emptied, I went home and began planning for the next day's delights.

I made polyoron, suman cassava, spending days and nights preparing them while listening to the radio for developments at Edsa.

I worked continuously, not sleeping, not taking meals. I just swallowed polyoron and water every now and then. This went on for three days. As soon as I had two pastic bags ful, of suman and polyoron, I would run to our parish church to give them to the ralbers.

When I heard over the radio that Marcos had fled, I cried, thanked God and fell asleep medical community and be counted among the people who wanted change. We were prepared to offer a part of ourselves to achieve:t

We proceeded in a convoy of vehicles to Edsa and encamped in a waiting shed near Camp Agumaldo in front of the main gate of Camp Crame. We took care of the swelling crowd, dispensing medicines, mostly analgesics bought with our individual contributions.

A second batch of students came with medicines, solicited from consultants' clinics and from the meager resources of the student council.

On our second day at Edsa, we had an argument with a representative of the Red Cross who told us to remove our improvised "red cross" badges. She said we were neither authorized nor trained

This did not dampen our youthful idealism. Although aged at least 22 years, most of us were in a state of "suspended adolescence" to better cope with the length of training in our chosen profession.

We were later requested to move into Camp Crame to take care of soldiers and the other people inside. The security checkpoint at the front gate became our new station

Many times, information from "inside" would reach us of the possibility of an encounter and the need for volunteers for an "on-the-scene" medical team.

Each time, we would say our goodbyes to classmates and friends, not knowing what would happen. Every time we returned to our station, there would be handshakes and hugs. We would always say a prayer of thanks that all went well and our friends were back.

And then word spread that Sikorsky helicopters had been dispatched to attack Crame. This time, no one asked for volunteers.

We all knew that it would be most dangerous outside our station. Yet, all of us stuffed our bags with gauze and bandages. We hugged each as a sign of friendship and said farewell to schoolmates who had become our friends and friends who had become our brothers.

In fact, it was a turning point in the revolution. The Sikorskys that came were allies, not Back at school, we decided to build on our new relationship as brothers. Forged under the trying times of the Edsa People Power revolution, we formed the Beta Deita Fraternity, the Brotherhood of Doctors from the DLSU College of Medicine.

young artists in their mid-twenties, Forbes had a hit show last June at the Glorietta 4 Art Space. His show consisted of large and medium scale oil and acrylic works he earlier did as illustrations for the children's eco-fable, "Elias and His Trees." All the works were sold

It was Forbes's first-and as it turned out, only-solo show. Previously, he had been featured in duo or group shows with established or emergent artists such as Anton Balao and the Samonte brothers, Jeff and Marvin, who also all painted Guyito. In almost all instances, collectors and art lovers snapped up Forbes's highly colorful and magical works.

Forbes first broke into the art scene by winming the grand prize in oil or acrylic of the Petron art contest in 2001 when he was 20. (The grand prize for watercolor was won by another young artist, Yveese Belen, who became Porbes's girlfriend and was at his bedside when he died)

Even before Petron, Forbes had won the juror's prize in the PLDT contest. After Petron, he went on to score a "grand slam" by similarly winning the grand prize in the Metrobank and Sheil contests.

Happy childhood

A native of Obando, Bulacan, Forbes was born on May 29, 1980. He apparently drew his artistic roots from the folk culture of the town famous for hosning a shrine to the Biessed Mother that draws devotees from all over the country who have problems with fertility. The river town is also famous for its agriculture and fishery as well as for its colorful folk art.

Perhaps because he had a happy childhood in Obando, Forbes found his mark in painting colorful naif canvases that were redolent with childhood memones. He painted one-dimensional figures the way a child would, endowing them with mutimensionality and depth through adept composition and breath-taking colors.

Forbes had an unerring sense of color. His trademark colors were yellows, oranges, reds, blues and purples that spontaneously whirled without canceling one another out, but melded and mixed to create a merry canvas

Even the art market abroad took notice. Last November, this author found Forbes and the Artery, his manager, in Singapore arranging a show there. He was booked for shows starting this June in several Singapore galienes.

Optimistic 'Guyito'

His work for the Guyito series in connection with the INQUIRER'S 20th anniversary last year exhibited his best strengths as a naif artist and vibrant colorist. Forbes had said he worked on the mascot for a week, giving it yellow horns, green hair, matching red face and body, with hooves of different colors.

In another indication of his happy childhood, Porbes painted four kids on Guyito's stomach-two on each side. Here were the artist's trademark one-dimensional figures, with their crooked harriess heads, eyes of different colors (one red, one black) and arms with four-fingered hands trying to catch a thunderstorm of letters. The letters of course were the symbols of literacy and learning. The work was titled "Murrunting Hakhang ni Juan de la Cruz (Small steps of Juan de la Gruz) "

In his beautiful Tagalog, Forbes explained the concept of the work.

Port of Manila stinks, Prince Charles writes

LONDON-BRITAIN'S PRINCE CHARLES faced more unwelcome publicity on Wednesday with the release of a private journal in which he voiced fears about corruption in the Chinese army and called the port of Manila awful and smelly.

The hear to the throne is suing the Mail on Sunday newspaper in London's High Court for publishing extracts of the journal, which covers a trip to Asia for the handover of the British coiony of Hong Kong to China

Charles has argued his journals should remain private. But the journal at the center of the case, which he titled "The Handover of Hong Kong" or "The Great Chinese Takeaway," was released on Wednesday to journalists covering the proceedings.

After leaving Hong Kong, the prince visited the Philippines.

He describes Manila as "an awful, smelly polluted harbor absolutely clogged with filth and rubbish." But he also states: "The Philippines were incredibly friendly and warmhearted and pleased to see the British." He praises British Prime Minister Tony Blair.

"He is a most enjoyable person to talk to-perhaps partly due to his being younger than mel He also gives the impression of listening to what one says, which I find astounding," the prince writes.

Charles is suring for breach of copyright and confidentiality in a case aimed at determining whether members of the British roya, family are entitled to the same level of privacy as ordinary members of the public.

The work shows Forbes' unfaltering optimism, his youthful sense of possibilities, and the unlimited reach of his imagination, which seems to have been limited so tragically by death and disease.

The body of Romeo Forbes lies at the family home at 112 Flamingo St., Panghulo, Obando, Bulacan. Burial is on March 2 at Arkong Bato Cemetery, Valenzuela City.

Why Edsa

THAT FILIPINOS SET OUT TO DO IN METRO Manila, during those historic February days two decades ago, their countrymen also did throughout the rest of the land, Baguio City, Cebu City, Davao City were just some of the other major urban centers that saw a citizenry rise up, regardless of the consequences, to make a stand. And so the whole country stood-the people would not budge—and as a result, EDITORIAL Ferdinand Marcos began what he thought was a retreat to the Ilocos that became a route to exile.

When Jaime Cardinal Sin and Butz Aquino called upon the people to rescue Juan Ponce Enrile and Fidel V Ramos from almost certain arrest and possible death, the confrontation between the people and Marcos was accelerated But it had already begun-indeed, it had, for most, begun on Aug. 21, 1983-and the one million who had shown up at Rizal Park for Cory Aquino's victory rally proved that people were prepared to keep the confrontation going however long it took.

The idea at the time was civil disobedience against a government declared by the bishops as having lost the moral authority to govern. When the Edsa Revolution began, Corazon Aquino was, in fact, in Cebu City as part of the gearing-up for what everyone expected to be a long,

drawn-out campaign

As had been demonstrated in an escalating commutment to no longer be afraid and reclaim the freedoms that had been shamefully surrendered to Marcos in 1972—our freedoms and right to speak out—since 1983, the public was in it for the long haul. In that sense, it is perhaps mistaken to focus on the glorious days of Edsa as a freak accident. If it had miraculous attributes to it, it was the transformation of the Armed Forces from the enforcer and beneficiary of the dictatorship through armed might, to an institution that regained what Marcos had lost, a sense of self-control.

It would have been easy to crush people under the tread of armored personnel carners; it would have been, considering the "New Society's" bloody heritage, justifiable to mow down the crowds with machine guns. It would have been easy to continue the original plans to undertake a bloody coup, to resume its objectives once defections made it possible to wage a wider, bloodier revolt. The Armed Forces did not having been saved peacefully, our military officers and men contributed to saving the country as peacefully as they could. That was the miracle, and it was exemplified by Juan Ponce Enrile, chief enforcer and one of the prime beneficiaries of martial law, apologizing to the people. No other Marcos-era lackey ever did that, and Enrile deserves credit for it to this day, regardless of what he's done since.

There are times when the many threads of a nation's history suddenly get woven together to create a tapestry. In 1983, Filipmos discovered empathy-first for Ninoy, then for all the martyrs who died when, in Jose Rizal's phrase, the country was asleep in the darkness-and then they discovered not only that they missed, but craved, democracy. The long tradition of peaceful protest that saw mass demonstrations for independence in the 1930s had sprung back to life. The tradition of eloquence born of the Propaganda Movement was reborn. The instinct for national solidarity of the Revolution, and the near-infinite capacity for sacrifice of the Revolution and Philippine-American War was revived. Most of all, the same desire for decency that had reinvigorated our society in the time of Ramon Magsaysay and the need for personal courage shown during World War II came once more to the fore. The Edsa Revolution happened because the Filipino realized what he had to be: a human being with a compelling need to live up to the imperatives of being Filipino.

Humanity is such that It takes a few to inspire the many to stand together. Destiny is such that the few will only take a stand if the motive power of the many exists to energize the few. It has proven the destiny of all subjugated peoples that there must be the inflexible, the irreconcilable, the stubborn, who will defy what is easier to surrender to-bribery and intimidation-and by so doing, convince the rest that the slave does not have to be a slave. We were a nation of slaves, but it did not mean we wanted to remain in bondage, or that we would always be in that state. For that reason alone—going beyond what it is to be Filipino, and engaging what it means to be human in a world that has long rejected the concept of slavery-Edsa was, because it was what had to be.

"I AM THE BEST PERSON TO LEAD THIS nation through the transition," President Macapagal-Arroyo boasted to the Foreign Correspondents' Association of the Philippines (Focap) last Tuesday, if the Philippines shifts to a parliamentary form of government would be the worst person to lead a transition, regular, or any other government. We are going through the throes of a proposed Charter change and a shift to a new form of government precisely because of her. We have a host of problems-corruption, poverty, unemployment, poll cheating, gargantuan debts, insulficient income, economic stagnation, etc.--precisely because she is the President. We have the present political instability precisely because of her first five years of governance. The longer she stays in Malacañang, the worse the situation will be. That is why people are marching in the streets. They want her to step down

Why does she believe she is the "best" when the opimon polls show very clearly that the people don't want her anymore? According to the polls, 80 percent of Filipinos don't want her as their President; her popularity rating is minus 30, the lowest rating of any president in the world. But she has the remerity to claim she is the "best."

It is understandable why GMA is coldshouldering the anniversary celebration of People Power I and why former President Fldel V Ramos is sore for not having a big celebration as in the past years. FVR was one of the heroes of Edsa I; GMA had nothing to do with it. The other beroes of that glorious event, principally former President Corazon Aquino, have asked her to resign.

FVR, on the other hand, wants to relive his giory days. His role in People Power I is about the only thing he can be proud of. Certainly, he can't be proud of his achievements as president. Neither can GMA.

GMA herself was a beneficiary of Edsa II but now that she is the President, she denigrates People Power revolutions. There will be no need for it when we shift to a parliamentary system, she says.

benefited from it.

On the contrary, we would need it even more, considering the people who are very interested in it and would most likely control parliament. Just thinking about it would make one shudder in terror. If you think corruption is bad now, wait until we have a parliament. It is like having the present House of Representatives running the whole government: the legislative, executive and judicial departments. The congressmen can do anything they want because there would be no checks and balances in the government. What the party in power wants, it gets. Thievery on a grand scale would be common-even more so than now it would be another form of dictatorship, with the dictator being the party in power.

in such a case, what can the people do?

People Power is the most glorious thing that the Pilipino people have done and we should be very proud of it. It inspired the whole world, and a number of other countries imitated it to also free themselves from despotic rulers. Now GMA is denigrating it, saying it won't be needed, after she herself

GMA has made its commemoration low key because she is afraid the people may be inspired by that first bloodless revolution 20 years ago and do it again-to her.

Casmos have a bad image in the Philippines, but gaming in the world has already evolved into a respectable hotel-gaming-enterrainment-recreation business.

There are now "integrated resorts" with, aside from casinos, theme parks, hotels, golf courses, theaters, sporting events, etc. The best singers and ensertainers like Frank Sinatra and his Rat Pack performed in Las Vegas. Many of the best championship boxing bouts (like Many Pacquiao's and Brian Vilioria's) are held there. Classical performers also perform there. Many tourists go to Las Vegas not to gamble but for the entertainment, the arts, retail shopping and the food.

Thus, the new complexes are like jewels that were collected from the dut that the old gambling casinos were.

Integrated resorts, or IRs, are the wave of the future. Asia already boasts of IR complexes in Macau, Malaysia and Korea. Singapore and Thailand are poised to follow suit. In the United States, besides Las Vegas, there is Detroit. Even the Indian reservations have their own IKS

Alumni of St. James Academy in Malabon will hold their grand reunion tomorrow at the Quezon City Sports Club on E. Rodriguez Avenue. The reunion will coincide with the anniversary of the school. It was established by the Maryknoll Sisters in 1928 as a normal school. Later, a high school was added. (Don't confuse it with St. James School, which is nerther a Catholic school nor named after a saint.) The reunion will start with a 5 p.m. Mass to be celebrated by priest-alumni of SJA.

Damaged culture, damaged state

THE REAL TRAGEDY IS NOT THAT EDSA'S legacy will be forgotten, but that it will be misunderstood. During the anti-Marcos struggle, we pined so much for democracy that we romanricized it, and now that reality hasn't lived up to myth, we are tempted to discard democracy and say that fascism wasn't so bad after Raul C. Pangalangan

Democracy is when the majority decides what is good for the country. Philippine democracy is where the majority decides what is good for itself. Between the two is a world of

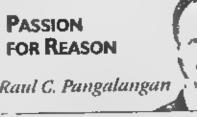

Take the jeepney, king of Manila's roads. A "good" jeepney driver will pick up passengers wherever they are conveniently found, and drop them off as close as possible to their desti-

Who cares about loading and unloading zones? They represent a public interest in or derly traffic, but that interest is purely abstract for the Filipino. It becomes real only if you are driving behind an annoying jeepney that stops whenever a passenger boards or disembarks, whether it is in the middle of the road or at the foot of a flyover or right smack in an intersection in front of a green light.

Good service is personal service, customized because it is humanized. A driver who respects loading and unloading zones is cold-hearted. Why drop off a taho vendor too far from his daily route? How un-Filipino, to numb oneself to human needs just to conform to callous rules!

No wonder then that the American writer was reviled Pallows abouts-though he has since been vindicated by many Filipinos-when he spoke famously of our "Damaged Culture." Writing in the Atlantic Monthly in 1987, he found the Pinoy as totally bereft of any sense of civic duty.

"Filipinos pride themselves on their lifelong loyalty to family, schoolmates, compadres, members of the same tribe, . the same barangay. [B]ut their culture draws the boundaries of decent treatment (so) narrowly . they exclude at any given moment 99 percent of the other people in the country. Because of . . this lack of useful nationalism, people treat each other worse in the Philippines than in any other Asian country ... The tradition of political corruption and cronyism, the extremes of wealth and poverty, the tribal fragmentation, the local elite's willingness to make a separate profitable peace with colonial powers—all reflect a feeble sense of national interest. Practically everything that is public in the Philippines seems neglected or abused."

Haven't you wondered: When we Pilipinos march on Edsa, we embody our loftnest civic selves dreaming of a better life for all. Yet the moment we drive on Edsa, it's dog-eat-dog all

The legal philosopher Unger explains that in Third World countries, the declared spiritual kleak are one thing, but the actual code people live by is another. In our "official political dog ma," we believe in rights, laws and the "cult of consent." But in real life, we treat "each other as patrons and clients and trading in favors and dependencies, (showing) almost complete disbelief in all institutions not founded on blood, property, or power. . as if a moment of personal presence were worth a thousand promises and as if any exercise of power could be tolerated so long as the veil of sentiment covered it."

Our democracy's public face is one big Oprah Winfrey show, where "the political becomes the personal" and feeling and intuition count more than impersonal ideologies-while in its hudden face, real decisions are made a la The Godfather through a tight network of clites. Pallows said that we reminded him of Malia families; "total devotion within the circle, total war on the outside."

of politics. The good news is that it empowers the isolated individual, gives him a voice, and tells him not to be embarrassed and to speak his heart. But the heart is moved by theater and dramatic anecdotes, while the public good is often found in cold facts, uninspiring and technocratic. The bad news, therefore, is that because the mass of our people are unorganized and non-ideological, populist democracy becomes an easy tool for what Claro Recto called "political ventriloquism" and allows the best organized conspiracies to project their voices as that of the sovereign.

Edsa restored the sacred principle of "one man, one vote," but it did not give back "Power to the People." It merely restored the old famihes and local warlords and, next, it purveyed high-profile media celebrity into political power. Saddest of all, the Filipino democrat couldn't complain, because that is precisely how our democracy works.

Edsa installed populist, not a normative, governance. It is a democracy of counting votes, not weighing values. It hearkens the noisiest and most Machiavellian, not the most

Living proof of non-normativity is President Macapagal-Arroyo herself. How can she now insist on "no permit, no rally"? Why, did the crowds at Edsa I and II hold rally permits? Why then does the main beneficiary of Edsa II now impose on her enemies a requirement she hadn't met? Even Marcos and Estrada hesitated to sic their troops on unarmed civilians, yet GMA does it sanctimoniously in the name of

Nostalgia trip

SINCE JULY LAST YEAR, DIFFERENT SECTORS disaffected with the government of President Macapagal-Arroyo have tried to harness People Power behind the campaign to overthrow her, with disappointing results.

In the commemoration this week of the 20th anniversary of the first People Power in 1986, faint echoes of this campaign have resurfaced, including widespread rumors of coup plots in the run-up to the anniversary, but these have been drowned by noise of a different kind; loud reminiscences of groups which played conspicuous roles in the overthrow of the Marcos dictatorship.

For these groups, this week is a nostalgra trip recalling the glorious success of Edsa I. The celebration has become a grand reunion of the Edsa I old boys' club of the alumni of the movement that toppled a dictatorship, it's now time to bask in the memory, but it's also time to ask: Will People Power happen again with the same results as Edsa I? The success of Edsa I stands in contrast to the lack of success of attempts during the past eight months to replicate it.

Since February 1986, there have been two people power outbrenks: in January 2001 and in May 2001. The second deposed President Joseph Estrda. The third, on May 1, 2001, was violent. A mob of Estrada supporters stormed Malacañang, but the rebellion was quickly crushed.

We must note that the February 1986 and January 2001 people power uprisings were relatively peaceful, resulting in two presidents being toppled without blood being shed. Since then, the character of people power—basically non-vio-lent—has changed, and after May 2001, the people power movements have become more unruly and turbulent, raising questions whether attempts to revive people power as a mode to change government could be as peaceful as the first two events.

The failure of the campaign to bring a mass of people to the streets to oust President Arroyo has been glibly explained as people power fatigue, but in my opinion, this explanation does not raise the correct questions. The questions that should be asked is why has people power, modeled on People Power I and II, failed to work on Ms Arroyo?

ANALYSIS Amando

True, Ms Arroyo could be as unpopular or as fiercely reviled as Marcos and Estrada, but we ask, what was it in Marcos and Estrade that sent people to the streets en masse? Why can't groups that have been working on the crowds to go to the streets inflame them with the same rage that drove the crowds that ousted Marcos and Estrada? What is it that makes Ms Arroyo different and that has allowed her to stonewall and survive during the past eight months, despite persistent efforts of her enemies to bring her down?

The coalitions that have combined against the Arroyo regime represent cross-sectoral interests, including the core of the opposition to the regime since the last election (mainly the losers in that election), a variety of civil society groups, former allies of Ms Arroyo, disgrantled military officers some of whom staged mutimes, and lately former President Corazon Aquino and a group of activist and outspoken Catholic bishops who have been in front of the noise brigade denouncing alleged rigging of the last election results, based on the infamous Garcillano tapes.

The composition of the ranks coalesced against Ms Arroyo reflects a broad base, and we can't complaint about their passion for change and their conviction that she should be changed. But why can't they mobilize a critical mass that is impressive enough to influence the military to intervene and break the protracted political impasse? The campaign to oust Ms Arroyo has been trying to get the constituency that formed the groundswell that swept out Marcos and Estrada. But it has not touched a resonance with that con-

What issues are different today from the issues of 1986 and 2001? Have people changed their priorities? What issues matter to them today?

Haven't those who want to relive their successes of 1986 and 2001 come to believe that people power is a static formula for political change fit for all occasions? Times have changed since Marcos and Estrada. Issues that have resonance with the people have changed. Maybe those who have been disappointed by the lack of response to their campaign to oust Ms Arroyo have to look for new issues and examine carefully what factors have emerged that allow her to stonewall.

The political terrain has shifted since 1986. The current anti-Arroyo coalition is trying to engage her in battle over the same terrain of 1986 and 2001, employing the same tactics and strategy.

But this coalition cannot use the success against Marcos and Estrada as the formula against Ms Arroyo. Both Marcos and Estrada had legitimacy problem. They lost legitimacy due to governance issues, like corruption and abuse of power. There is a legitimacy issue against Ms Arroyo over the alleged election-rigging scandal.

Perhaps we have to ask ourselves whether people power as a method of political change has worn thin, and more importantly, whether we are taking it too much for granted that whatever prescriptions for change offered by the politically active class will be followed by the people. After all, it may be safe to say that most of the people want change and for the better. Historically, the political class has taken for granted the intelligence of the masses. The masses know best what's good for them, but they were never integrated into the Edsa movements. They have been marginalized

Right and wrong

THE REGIONAL EDITION OF TIME MAGAZINE, A BBC World radio series, as well as dozens of local newspapers and magazines all seem to be asking the same question on the 20th anniversary of Edsa I: "What went wrong?"

Trying to answer that question by looking only at the last 20 years may be futile. The post-Edsa era is, after all, only one phase in our life as a people. We need to go further back, through our colonial past, even into the pre-colonial period.

That would take an entire book, so I thought I'd focus today only on the postwar era, at our life as an independent nution. That post-war era can actually be divided into three phases of roughly 20 years each. The first phase began with the restoration of independence on June 12, 1946, lasting into 1966, the first year of the Marcos presidency. The second period was that of Marcos, through his term as an elected president into martial law and his ouster in February 1986. The third period was the post-Marcos era from 1986 to the present.

What's striking is that each phase began with optimism, even euphoria, only to be followed by shattered dreams, often ending with a sense of betrayal and failure and then followed again by a new cycle of hope. Hindsight just might give us the foresight to deal with the next 20-year phase.

Independence

When we regained independence on June 12, 1946, the country was still reeling from the destruction of the war. Only a year and a half earlier, Manila had been leveled by bombs in the final battle to drive out the Japanese invaders. Hundreds of thousands were homeless and hungry, nursing the injured and disabled, mourning for the dead.

But we were at least a nation victorious, the invaders expelled. Compared to many of our neighboring countries, we were fairly advanced, with higher literacy rates, an economic and political infrastructure. The Americans also poured in money, albeit tied to unfair trade treaties and the retention of US military bases, to help with post-war rehabilitation.

By the 1950s, we were riding high as one of the richest countries in the region. Wealthy Filipinos didn't think twice about flying off to Hong Kong for weekend shopping sprees.

I remember, too, hearing older uncles and aunts predicting that as the Philippines developed, it would become harder and harder to get domestic helpers. "By the 1970s, there won't be poor muchachas left to work for us," I remember one aunc's bold prediction.

Then, as now, we had rosy statistics that proclaimed economic growth. Then, as now, we seemed to have a strong peso, a fixed exchange rate of P2 to the dollar. But the development that took place was selective, mainly favoring the landed eitre that exported sugar and copra to the United States. Grinding poverty remained, especially in rural areas, fueling a Huk rebellion. And corruption was rife, including profiteering from rehabilitation money.

We had several presidents during these early years of the Republic: Manuel Roxas, Elpidio Quirino, Ramon Magsaysay, Carlos Garcia and Diosdado Macapagal. Each began his term with high hopes, each proposed his own version of land reform, each his own brand of Filipino nationalism, including, at times, opposition to the US bases.

In the last years of that first cycle, we had Diosdado Macapagal as president. He tried to respond to rural unrest with a weak land reform program. In 1962, he also let loose the Philippine peso, allowing it to "float."

Camelot

But the Philippines was clearly ailing, in need of change. Perdinand Marcos defeated Macapagal and took office in 1966, ushering in a new era. He was young and charismatic. He and his wife Imeida were compared to America's Kennedys. John R Kennedy had been assassinated in 1963 but memories lingered of his presidency, of a kind of wonderland Camelot.

But Marcos' popularity sank quickly during his first term. Unrest continued to grow, spilling into the cities. The Huks were in decline but a new Communist Party and a New People's Army emerged during Marcos' presidency.

Marcos was the first president to win reelection, but this happened at great cost, depleting the national treasury. Political unrest continued to spread. Desperate to remain in power, he tried to get a new constitution that would allow him to stay on. When that failed, he declared martial law and ushered in new hopes, among a middle class convinced that authoritarianism was the way forward.

The economy grew. There were a few token moves to wean us away from our dependence on America, mainly by creating a new market for a novel new export: people. This sector grew through the years, keeping the country's economy floating, and providing a safety valve to diffuse social discontent even to this day. But people grew weary of corruption, crony capitalism, human rights violations. The assassination of Ninoy Aquino m 1983 was a turning point, rousing even the apathetic middle class. The Republic's second phase ended with the fall of Marcos in 1986.

People Power

We were again a proud people, full of hopes. We passed a new Constitution that was largely progressive with its provisions against another dictatorship, and with a bias toward promoting social justice. But we know what happened in the last 20 years. From the beginning, the odds were stacked against change. While the communist and Moro rebellions declined, we had to contend with an array of right-wing forces. We had nine attempted coups during the Aquino presidency. We later voted Gregorio Honasan, one of the coup leaders, into the Senate and in the last few years, conservative legislators have pulled their own coups, hijacking the Constitution to serve their purposes. We had Fidel Ramos, then Joseph Estrada, then Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo. (Do you sense how my voice trails off as I type their names?) My aunt's prediction about disappearing muchachas wasn't quite right: we still have them in abundance for our homes, even as we now export teachers and midwives and nurses and doctors-turned-nurses to work as muchaches and muchachas to the world.

As this third phase of the Republic ends, we again see mixed moods. The President and big business are upbeat with their economic statistics. I've never seen so many highrise condominiums and Jaguars and BMWs on our roads, and out in rural areas, each week seems to see a new luxury resort, health spa or golf course. We're awash with yen and dollars: last week a friend told me a taxi driver had given her a dollar bill instead of P50 as change.

In the last month alone, as we close this third phase of the Republic, we saw the poor and the jobiess dying in a stampede for tickets to a nountime entertainment show offering prizes. Two weeks later, an entire village was wiped off the face of the earth by a landslide, his residents too poor to move away from an area long identified as a geological

The last 60 years should have given us enough lessons about what could go wrong in a nation. Must we ask that same question again in 2026? It's time we seriously thought of righting those wrongs, before trying to move on.

"EDSA 101" MIGHT WELL BE THE ALTERNAtive title to Edsa 1986: Mga Tinig ng (Himagsikan," the latest video documentary produced by the Foundation for Worldwide People Power (FWWPP), produced in observance of the 20th anniversary of the People Power uprising (Contrary to my assertion in an earlier column, the four-day Edsa event officially began Feb. 22, mot Peb. 20 as I wrote.)

The documentary might well seem a rehash of old and well-known events, at least to those of us who were around and may even have been on Edsa during those four days, or at least following all these developments closely. But we are not "Edsa 1986's" primary audience. The video is meant primarily for Filipinos born shortly before or after 1986, who may know little about the first manifestation of "People Power" and what led to it, and thus may care little for the lessons to be learned from Edsa.

As the producers explain, a focus-group discussion conducted among current UP students and out-ofschool youth revealed that the "post-lidsa" generation "are barely aware of what those events were and their significance in Philippine history." The young people's knowledge of these events, it turned out, was also "superficial and severely limited."

This may explain why "Edsa 1986" sometimes comes across as an educational video, with animated scenes illustrating salient points (such as the analogy of the confluence of events with a mango ripening), and using what the producers reall "an MTV-type program format," including a unazzy "hip-hop" score the few entertainment figures who squarely staked their lives and careers on the "yellow" side during the ann-Marcos protests, pairs with young TV perisonality Branca Gorzalez in walking us through the events of Edsa and the personalities behind them.

BUT even for those who lived through those days, "Edsa 1986" offers new insights and littie-known details. At the press preview hosted by FWWPP chair and sparkplug Eggie Apostol, who served "Edsa food" like boiled peanuts and barbecue to her guests, Edsa veterans who already knew how the uprising ended and the many "inside stories" still followed the documentary with anticipation.

AT LARGE

As the producers explain, another objective was to acknowledge the roles played by people they called the "real heroes" of Edsa, individuals who played their parts in anonymity, content to let the spotlight shine on the principals.

Thus the documentary features interviews with such background players as Silvestre Afable III, who was Enrile's former special assistant; Edgardo Doromal, a member of the Presidential Security Command who revealed the coup plot to his superiors after being approached by RAM members; Avelino Razon, Fidel Ramos' former security officer; and former Air Force Col. Antonto Sotelo, whose defection to the rebel side marked the "turning point" of Edst.

The "other side' B rel rine Col. Braulio Balbas, who led the "loyalist" forces who broke through the ranks of protesters guarding Camp Aguinaldo but who refused to fire on the rebels inside Camp Crame; Gen. Lisandro Abadia, at the time APO Hilling Society member Jim Paredes, one of Army chief for Operations; and Salvador Escudero III, Marcos' minister of agriculture.

Also interviewed for the first time on television are Sisters Terry and Ping, the two nuns whose photo showing them kneeling and wielding rosaries in front of tanks became a symbol of the lopsided "battle" at Edsa.

FR. CATALINO Arevalo, S.J., a theologian who took active part among the troops at Edsa, provided one of the sharpest insights into the "missiculous" events of those four days.

Was Edsa indeed a "miracle," as some breathlessly claim? It wasn't a miracle in the sense that God descended and performed a supernatural act, Pather Arevalo explained. Rather, what took place was "a miracle in the heart of everyone who was there," including, we might add, the soldiers and officers who refrained from firing a shot despine orders from their superiors, and thus brought about an episode in history acknowledged as the Filipino's proudest moment.

What makes viewing "Edsa 1986" a bitter-sweet experience, at least for this Edsa survivor, is the realization that the high hopes that swelled in everyone's hearts during those four days have been dashed to pieces today, 20 years after.

Especially ironic were the words quoted from the statement of the Catholic bishops shortly after the fraudulent and violent elections of 1986, which points out that a president who ascends to office "through fraud and decent" has lost the moral right to lead. Perhaps that's why the Arroyo administration would rather that people forgot the events at Edsa.

DIRECTOR Butch Nolasco and scriptwriters Nancy and Raul Rodrigo deserve credit for organizing the events of Edsa and tracking the chronology and arranging the narrative—and the numerous interviews—into a coherent story that is both compelling and entertaining.

The post-Edsa kids might take the documentary as an exciting retailing of a tension-filled period in recent history. But their parents, while reliving the suphoria and fear of those days, would more likely feel a twinge of regret, if not depression. After all, we've run out of excuses after 20 years, as we had more than enough time-if not exactly the opportunity-to effect the reforms we championed, create the new world we envisioned.

Then again, perhaps it's no longer our mistion to fulfill. It might be time to turn over the dream to the next generation, the next Edsa warriors, and pray that they never have to go through it again.

Aids to memory

WHILE MOST PEOPLE ASSOCIATE FEBRUARY with Valentine's, I have been remembering two events in our history that also happened in February. On the 4th, we commemorate the outbreak of the Philippine-American War that began with a bang in 1899. An old stone bridge in San Juan used to be the focus of attention on this day, until we moved the site, based on better research, to a little corner in Sta. Mesa, to Sociego Street off Magsaysay Boulevard. On Pebruary 17th, we commemorate the execution of Gomez, Burgos and Zamora who were killed with the garrote in what is now Rizal Park in 1872.

If you stand in front of the Rizal monument, you will see a squat white obelisk (very badly done actually) behind and to the left of the Rizal monument that marks the spot where Gomburza were dispatched with that terrifying instrument called the garrote. Contrary to popular belief, the Victim placed in a garrote is not killed by slow strangulation; rather death was supposedly quick, and relatively painless, following the breaking of the neck. A metal bar was placed snugly against the victim's neck and, at a given signal, the executioner gave a screw a swift turn and the victim was dead. Since nobody has survived to tell us that this contraption was painless, we presume it was a humane way of execution.

Gomburza were burled in Paco Cemetery, and there they lie forgotten, except for simple commemorations held in Rizal Park every Feb. 17. 1 have since asked the Archbishop of Manila, Gaudencio (now Cardinal-elect) Rosales, to lead an even simpler commemoration next year in Paco. There will be no boring speeches from historians or politicians; instead Cardinal Rosales could pray the Office of the Dead and sprinkle holy water on the graves, together with the secular clergy who owe a lot to Gomburza and should be made to remember their sacrifice in 1872.

To illustrate how much we have forgotten Gomburza, many years ago a ladies toilet was erected over their common grave, it took a foreigner to call my attention to this. When I told then Manila Mayor Alfredo S. Lim about it, the toilet was removed within a few bours.

What made this act terrible was that there were a lot of other spots within Paco Cemetery where the totlet could have been built. Why did it have to be over the grave of Gomburza? These three men inspired so many of our heroes, including Rizal and Bonifacio.

When Mariano Gil, parish priest of Tondo, exposed the Katipunan and thus jump-started the Philippine Revolution, there was a wave of arrests, searches and seizures all over Manila. The items found-from daggers to Katipunan papers and documents-were all kept as evidence. One of the things I would most want to see are some zinclined boxes buried in one place that contained:

".. Several Katipunan documents, three ribbons from the cassocks of the three native priests executed in 1872 for complicity in the revolt of that year, ribbons that were preserved as relics by the rebels. A picture of General Izquierdo, who ordered the execution of the three priests, was also found; and a Masonic apron upon which was painted the severed head of a Spaniard held by the hair by a Filipino hand."

Another friar, Celestino de las Huertas, OFM, sers a communication to his superiors in Madrid regarding the outbreak of the Revolution in 1896, where he mentioned the contents of Andres Bonifacio's "secret chest" found in the ceiling of the warehouse of Fressell and Co. where Bonifacio worked as a bodeguero. The contents of this chest were:

"[Documents detailing the] complete organization of the Filipino Republic, also official decrees, rebel appointments, regulations of the republic, civil and penal codes written in tagaiong and Spanish. There were also found photographs of Padre Burgos, Padre Gomez, and Padre Zamora. Of Padre Burgos there were several and on the back of an old one is the picture of General Gan-

"Among the regalia were found as relics pieces of the gowns used during the executions of 1872 and written on each piece into which the rebes are divided is the name of the rebel to which they belonged, that of Padre Burgos being the most highly prized as it is given only to reward very meritorious services."

I have always been fond of relies because they are one way to remind us of our heroes. Some people even have to be reminded that heroes were real people who once walked the earth like you and me. Once I brought my students to the crypt of San Agustin Church and pointed out the niche where the remains of Juan Luna were deposited. Most of the students looked at it and walked away, but one girl stood in front of the niche for a long time. I presumed she was in awe or reverence of a great artist and patriot, so I asked her what she was thinking. She replied, "Totoong tao pala iyang si Luna (So Luna was a real man after all)."

The remark surprised me, and I wanted to tell her, "Who told you Lima was not real?" But I left ber there to reflect on her observation.

This was a UP student, one of the best and brightest in the country. If she thought this way, it makes me shudder to even imagine what students think in other parts of the archipelago.

If you want to see a really bizarre relic, go to Port Santiago and see the preserved backbone of Rizal in a display case.

Islam, terrorism are not the issue

I DO NOT CONDONE THE VIOLENT PROtests that some Muslims have mounted against the cartoons depicting the Prophet Mohammed. However, I cannot tolerate and accept in my heart the cartoons. Any drawing, carroon or symbol depicting the Prophet is forbidden by Islamic law since this is tantamount to promoting idolatry.

Israel and Palestine have been at war since God knows when, but they never crossed the line of insulting each other's religious belief. Such is the unwritten law that even the freedom of expression must not violate.

You do not disgrace Buddha, Jesus Christ (also considered by Islam as one of its prophets), Moses or the Pope in the same way that you do not disgrace the Prophet of Islam.

The issue here is not about terrorism or Islamic fundamentalism, but about respect and human co-existence. Although there is disparity in the manner of expressing their anger and outrage, the Muslims around the world have been unified by the cartoon issue.

Instead of contributing to peace, the controversial newspaper has put to waste whatever achievements had been made to promote peace in the world.

To all Muslims in the world, let us pray that Allah may give us the patience and tolerance which the Prophet Mohammed would have displayed in this most difficult time in our lives.

Triumph and tragedy

(Edsa's 20th, a new coup and the Leyte landslide have been on our readers' minds this week. Faced with the counterpoint between past triumph and present tragedy and aggravation, more thoughts of what individual citizens can do to alleviate the burdens seem to be emerging with greater frequency.)

The gall of these lawmakers claiming to donate the people's money, as if it were their own. We don't need such grandstanding from these so-called servants of the people. What we need is for them to find ways to stop the scams and the corrupt deals that drain the national coffers and [line] the pockets of the powers-that-be. If only our politicians and government officials put half as much effort in solving real social and economic problems as they do in [controversial] issues, the Philippines would be the great country that it should be.

We, the people, should start being responsible for our own development in all aspects, owning our success and failures and stop putting our destiny in the hands of politicians. By doing so, we can empower ourselves to become the best that we can be, without being subjected to their abuse, waiting for false promises and doles they cannot really deliver. Then we can take an active part in censuring erring officials without feeling the burden of a false sense of gratitude.--Carmencita Pe (via e-mail)

The "Gloriagate" crisis (has) served as an eye-opener for us Filipinos. It proves that we are not united as a nation. We tend to find fault in each other-and when we have found a fault, we magnify it without testing its validity. We waste our time in focusing on this single fault instead of concentrating on what's good for our country.

There's really a need to shift our focus to finding out what good each one of us has done for the country. There is also a need for our leaders to do a significantly good job.—Hershe Legaspina, Cebu City

GMA is redefining the value of a major historical event in our country. This is the height of arrogance and it is directed against us millions of Filipmos who, on that fateful February in 1986, were willing to die in the name of democracy after long years of Marcos' oppression.

To end this crisis, we continue to believe that Gloria must resign her post now. We must also convince others so that we will grow in number to continue opposing and challenging her leadership of deception and half-truths. -Ednar Carlos Dayanghirang, ednarcarlos@yahoo.com

So people won't forget

This is so that people will not forget that Ninoy started this," Aquino said, referring to her late husband, Benigno Jr., whose 1983 assassination became the catalyst for the movement that brought down the dictator Ferdinand Mar-

"We will have a short program, we will have prayers and sing some songs. I will also make a short statement," Aquino said.

Approached by reporters at a forum on microfinance at the Asian Institute of Management which she helped organize, Aquino declined to answer questions about political issues, saying she would answer these in today's march.

But in her prepared statement on microfinance, she spoke about how the gains from People Power were undermined by other participants in the uprising.

Tust as our efforts were beginming to bear fruit, these were stymted by erstwhile tactical allies with a latent disdain for democracy, and nothing more than an opportunistic view of People Power," she said.

Unfinished revolution

"As a result, our revolution remained unfinished and much of our democratic institutions remain weak to this day," Aquino said.

Del Rosario noted that businessmen not only participated in the 1986 uprising but also in the events that led to it, notably the creation of the National Citizens'

Movement for Free Elections. The MBC convened a powerhouse group of business leaders, religious leaders and anti-Arroyo forces last Wednesday to assess the lingering crisis that has bedevfled the country since last year

But while MBC members have openly enucized the President, only a handful have joined anti-Arroyo ralkes

"We feel this is a good time to start taking an active role in solving the problems of our country," said Del Rosario. Among the businessmen expected to join the rally are MBC chair Ricardo Romulo, Oscar Hilado, Cesar Buenaventura, Philamlife president Jose Cuisia and Roberto de Ocampo, a former finance secretary.

Ninoy's major role

Ms Arroyo has kept this year's commemoration low-key. She has attended only one event in the four-day celebrations.

Del Rosario said he expected Agumo to remind the people of the exploits of her husband that he said were not as appreciated now as they were two decades

"I think she wants to remind us that Ninoy had a major role to play in Edsa People Power and that Filipinos should never forget his martyrdom. She felt that we might have forgotten about Ninoy and the need to live up to his ideals, the same ideas we fought for in Edsa," he said in a phone interview.

Emboldened by what they claimed to have been a successful anti-Arroyo rally at Edsa on Wednesday, militant groups said they would bring a bigger contingent to the People Power Monument there today.

Edsa, Manila railies

The Bagong Ayansang Bayan expects up to 50,000 people at the Edsa raily whose twin goals are the ouster of Ms Arroyo and the commemoration of the first People Power revolution 20 years ago.

"We don't think Gloria can be ousted by a coup. Only a People Power [uprising] will do," said Carl Ala, information officer of the Kilusang Magbubuked ng Pilipinas. The Bayan protesters will march to Liwasang Bonufacio in Manila in the afternoon, Ale said.

In a build-up to the Liwasang Bonifacio ralty, some 20 members of peasant and fisherfulk organigations staged a fluvial procest on the Pasig River yesterday.

"This is just a sample of what's ning of a new People Power, the beginning of the end of Gloria Arroyo," said Gerry Albert Corpuz, information officer of the Pamalakaya fisherfolk group.

Noting the anti-administration rallies fined up to commemorate From page Al the first Edsa uprising, Maiacañang vesterday accused the President's opponents of being "oblivious" to the plight of the victims of the Southern Leyte tragedy.

Spend time, money in S. Leyte

"Nobody, least of all the government, questions their right to hold such rallies which are part of the political rights of our citizens which are guaranteed under our Constitution," said Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita.

But he questioned their motive to "promote their agenda by capitalizing on the historic significance of the People Power revolution."

"The spirit of Edsa I was meant to foster, not divisiveness, but reconciliation and unity" Ermita said.

"Confronted as we are with this heart-wrenching tragedy that befell thousands of our fellow Filpinos in Southern Leyte, I believe it would be extremely advisable for all of us to desist from carrying out any partisan political activity at this time. This could be interpreted by our people and our foreign friends as indicative of unconscionable insensitivity to the plight of our fellow men," he said instead of spending millions of pesos in mobilizing people to raily, Ermita said the money could be better spent in boosting search and rescue efforts in Guussaugon where 1,400 residents were buried in 30 meters of mud.

Querol said. Lomibao said the police would be lement with protesters because the celebrations have to do with Edsa "when the country freed itself from a dictatorship".

But there are limitations, like of Marikina not impeding traffic, he said.

"The order from General Ramos was to take everybody out of the site," Capt. Burrell Parmer told the PDI Central Luzon Desk by phone

The evacuation of all 142 Taiwanese, Malaysian, Spanish, Filipino and American volunteers was completed at 12:15 p.m., Parmer said.

Rescuers said yesterday's downpour was the worst since Sunday, or two days after the massive mudslide hit Guinsaugon.

Ramos said operations would continue as the weather improved.

In a separate interview, Southern Leyte Gov. Rosette Lerias said the resumption of operations would depend on the assessment of the experts—a statement with which Ramos expressed agreement.

Lerias said they had also decided to take aerial photos of the site so that they could come up with "more intelligent decisions."

'Trapped' team

Among the rescuers digging at the purported site of the school building were six Taiwanese teams composed of seven members each.

Team coordinator Benjamin Hung told reporters that one of the teams was about to heed the pullout order when it was "trapped" in the mud.

Hung said the team members were arlifted by a US Marine chopper along with the corpse of a woman that they found near a creek.

He said the team could just have left the corpse, which was being washed away by the rising waters. "But they brought it along with them out of respect for the victim," he said. Joseph Chang, liaison officer for the Taiwanese contingent, later downplayed the incident, saying the team was merely "muddied." Chang said the Taiwanese teams rested the whole afternoon but would continue working to-

Filipino Australian-trained forensic experts were sent to Southern Leyte yesterday to help identify the bodies.

To help in their work, the Australian government gave the Philippine National Police Crime Laboratory a trailer and forensic equipment worth P2 million. Eight Filipmo policemen, who had just completed disaster victim identification training with the Australian Federal Police, will try to identify unclaimed bodies using fingerprints, DNA and dental samples. Ernesto Belen, head of the PNP

Crime Laboratory, said they would join three Filipina policemen who had trained with Malaysian forensic experts.

"Another 18 will be sent to the sue (today) when their training with the military is completed," Belen said.

Crucial operation

He also said Australia's donation would help the crime lab, which had previously been "improvising" on some forensic equipment.

Yesterday's operation was considered crucial because US Marines were supposed to airlift a drill capable of digging 180 feet to the site where the Guinsaugon Elementary School is believed buried.

Lt. Col. Alex Vohr, commanding officer of the US 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit Service Support Group, said Wednesday night the drill would tell if rescuers were in the right spot.

"Hope is fading, but I believe in miracles," Ozgur Bozog.u, coordinator of the nine-man rescue team from Turkey, told reporters

The ream arrived with a sound locator called a "vibrophone." Bozoglu said it was capable of picking up "seismic activity and rhythmic sounds, like scratching" from under 100 meters deep "under normal conditions."

In the landsade, he said, the instrument was expected to work only up to depths of 20 to 25 meters.

school science program to come up with solutions to deal with the janitor fish that has become a big problem for the city government

Also called sucker mouth fish, the janstor has been multiplying very fast in the Marikina River, feeding on algae and depriving other fish of nutrients.

Though scientists consider the janitor fish (Pterygophchthys pardalis) safe for human communption, most people consider it medible because of the unsantrary environment in which it thrives.

Limb did Raymond know that the pesky januor fish would be his ticket to an international science competition in the United States in May as representative of the Philippines. A senior high school student at

mond was one of six winners of the Intel Philippines Science and Engineering Fair held at the University of the Philippines in Diliman, Quezon City, last week.

He will compete against 1,400 students from 40 countries in the International Science and Engineering Pair in Indiana, according to the Marikina government's public information office.

For bio-fuel

Raymond's feat involved an experiment in which he set out to prove that oil extracted from the ianitor fish could be used as a bio-fuel to run motor vehicles.

Raymond's mother, Janet, 50, who is also his chemistry teacher and who served as his coach, said jankor fish oil was "almost similar" in quality to coco-diesel, the fuel oil extracted from ecconut that the government has been promoting as an alternative to petroleum.

The city government launched several programs beginning in 2004 to control the janutor fish population, even promising cash rewards to fishermen who catch janitor fish in large numbers.

Janet Amurao was a member of the committee organized to solve the problem. She brought the challenge to the Marikina City High School and with her then junior high school students began experimenting with the fish.

Accidental discovery

Janet describes het son as "an average student" who just "accidentally" stumbled on his discovery.

Raymond was watching his classinates who were working on an experiment to turn jacutor fish meat into chicken feed. The fish meat had to be boiled as it was very hard.

Raymond noticed that there was a considerable amount of oil floating in the boiling water. He started reading up on coco-diesel, and thought of converting the fish oil into a bio-fuel. Raymond's mitial experiment with 12 kilos of janitor fish produced 500 ml of processed fuel.

Like diesel

Janet said they calculated the fuel value of janitor fish oil and the results were comparable to that of diesel The next step would be to test the performance of the fuel on motor vehicles, she said. "We were able to prove that the janitor fish is no longer a pest, but something which has many uses," Janet said.

Aside from bio-fuel, she said the skin of the junitor lish could be used with leather in the manufacture of choes and bags.

TWO PARKED VEHICLES DISAPPEARED INto a deep hole in the ground while a tower crane collapsed after a portion of Adriatico Street in Ermita, Manila, caved in yesterday, causing panic among residents and occupants of nearby buildings.

Senior Insp. Alberto Peco of the Manila Police District said a white L-300 van and blue Kia Pregio van were "swallowed by the ground" at around 4 p.m. No one was hurt in the incident which left a hole over five foot deep and more than six meters long.

Peco said the incident may have been caused by the ongoing construction of Adriatico Residences, reportedly owned by the Robinsons' Land Corp.

Mario Sagum, detachment commander of Robinson's Place Manila, the mall beside the construction site, said the constant drilling may have produced vibrations which caused the ground underneath the vehicles to cave in.

A witness said he saw the two vehicles sink into the ground 10 minutes after he felt the ground shake violently Tike an earth-

Cops settle ownership of recovered cash

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

FOR THE POLICE, THE TUG-OFwar for the P49,000 in cash recovered by rescuers from a victim dusing the "Wowowee" stampede on-Feb. 4 at the PhilSports Arena in Pasig City is finally over.

The money was turned over to the Wrong family." Eastern Pouce District (CPD) Criminal Investigation Unit head Chief Insp. Rolly Viliar told the INQUIR-

He asked the children of stampede Victim, Aurora Soriano, to whom the eash was "prematurely" returned, to turn over the money to the kin of Virginia Javierto, Both Soriano and Javierto were both killed in the stampede. "We already sent a demand letter to the Sorianos to ask them to return the money," Villar said.

The police said they based their conchision on evidence like pictures taken during the tragedy, the recovered money, the dresses the victims were wearing on the day of the stampede, and video footage from a bank showing Javierto and her daughters withdrawing money.

Pasig City Rescue volunteer Candy Lacno found the cash while looking for identification cards from the victims.

The money-49 P1,000 bills in a white envelope—was inside the pocket of an elderly woman, who was holding a sky blue bag, Lacno recalled. When she found Sorano's identification card inside the bag, Lacno turned over the money to Soriano's son, Lovinsky.

But two days later, Javierto's son, Rizaldy, surfaced at the Pasig police station with his mother's maroon shirt, brown skirt and green pants that she reportedly wore when she went to the Ultra, and claimed the money was his mother's. To help in the investigation, Lovinsky also brought his mother's light brown shirt and blue denon pants.

Lacro had said the woman in whose pocket the money was found was wearing a blouse with a floral pattern and dark blue jogging pants.

In the two-minute footage, Javierto was shown with her two daughers withdrawing P50,000 from the Philippine Veterans Bank branch in Camp Aguinaldo. From there, the three had gone straight to the PhilSports Arena. Javiento was seen holding a cane, Valenzuela said. This detail matched Lacno's testimony that the woman from whom she found the cash had a wood-

Lovinsky had earlier said they were willing to return the cash if the police could prove it belonged to someone else. Police are still wanting for him to turn over the money to the Javiertos.

CANLUBANG—LONG SHOT RAMIL BISera fired a two-under-par 68 yesterday to grab a one-stroke lead, even as the country's top parbuster Frankie Miñoza opened up with a horrendous 77 at the start of the rich The Country Club Invitational here.

The Davao-based, early-starting Bisera took advantage of the benign conditions in the morning to gun a down four birdies, three of them on the back nine that lifted him ahead of veterans Cassius Casas and Robert Pactorerin.

"I'm quite surprised with my performance," the 31-year-old Bisera, who got going in the day's second flight at the tough par 35-35-70 exclusive course, said in Filipino. "There's no pressure at all considering the presence of the big names in this tournament."

Bisera's only claim to glory after turning pro in 2001 was winning a small tournament known as the Julio Cup in Villamor last year.

Casas, champion in the first edition of the tournament four years ago, bucked a bogey on the 11th and a double bogey on the 13th to the Pactolerin at 69. Casas had nines of 34-35 while Pactolerin acored 35-34.

The 46-year-old Muioza, who decided to play in this P4 million tournament with the Asian Tour taking a one-week break, posted one of his worst rounds on local

Mixoza had just one budie, on the 17th, while stumbling with two bogeys, a double bogey and a triple bogey in nines of 40-37

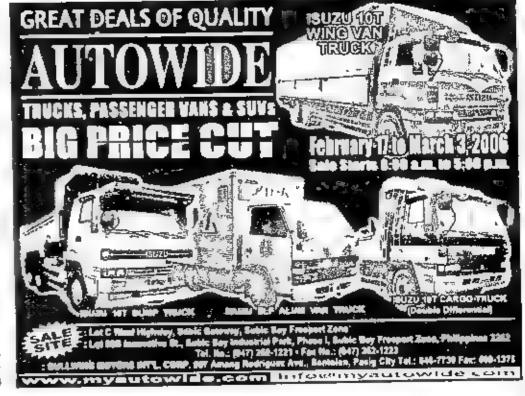

"My shots are fine despite the strong winds," said Miñoza, who needs a strong round to-day to join the top 16 players who will vie for the P1.2-million champion's purse in the weekend.

Also falling prey to the howling winds was defending champion Jerome Delariarte, who struggled with a 76.

Each of the 17 players who will miss the cut after the second round will get the survivor's prize of P12,000, a record amount for a non-qualifier.

Richard Sinfuego, Artenuo Murakami and Gerald Rosales marched par 70 while Juvic Pagunsan, Angelo Que and Roben Sasotil had 71s in this event institutionalized by port services magnate Ricky Razon to honor the memory of his father, Don Pochold.

SPORTS Rookies strike as Canlubang surges past S'woods

By Musong R. Castillo

DAVAO CITY—CANLUBANG'S PROMISING YOUNG guns spearheaded a swashbuckling charge no team came close to challenging yesterday and the Sugar Barons vaulted into the lead after two rounds of the Philippine Airlines Interclub golf championships here.

Jay Bayron and Jonel Ababa, champions of different caddies' events, tamed Apo Golf with 1-under-par 71s for 37 points, leading Canlubeng to a 144 total that not only erased the team's 10-point deficit but gave it an 11point lead over title defender Manila Southwoods.

It was actually a five-man roster of former caddies-fortr coming from this course-that pushed Canlubang to the top from third with a two-day 279 total.

And they gave non-playing skipper Luigi Yulo enough reason to be optimistic of a title double, which the Sugar barons set up Saturday with a breakthrough victory in the Seruors division.

Zamboanga native Mark Fernando, one of four rookies in the Canlubang fold, marched par for 36 points and — actually the No. 1, got him undone. Mario Labajo counted for the second straight day with a 34. The team was so productive that it had to discard Boyet Saragoza's 32.

If we at least match their (Southwoods) score (in the third round) tomorrow (today at Palos Verdes), this one is over," Yulo said. "It's "Advantage, Cankibang" at this stage and I think (11 points) is a safe enough lend."

Southwoods stayed in second despite a harrowing day, its measly Day 2 total of 123 led by the 35 of Michael Bibat and the 31 of Erwin Vinluan. The next two scorers were Gene Bondoc (29) and Jong Laput (28). Hanson So Je's 27 did not count.

The Carmona-based squad had a 268 total, just three up on Del Monte, which put together a 129.

National Caddies' Open champion Ababa, whose family lives just a stone's throw away from Apo Golf's main gate, collected five birdies against four bogeys. Remando, on the other hand, was working on a threeunder card when a four-putt on his 10th hole, which was Ondoy Montilla led 2004 champion Del Monte with 36 points, Louie Dacudao shot a 34 and Joel Opaco contributed 32 points. Del Monte missed gaining ground further as Paul Miñoza could no better than a 27. Ivgy Clavecilla's 24 did not count.

We expected this, because all of Canluberg's new recruits are from this place," said Del Monte captam Yoyong Velez. "We'll try to make some adjustments."

John Gobing shot 33 points, Oliver Gan chipped in a 30 and Augusto de Jesus and Matthew Manotoc turned in 29 and 28, respectively, for 120 as Wack Wack bloated its Founders division lead to 14 with a 236 total.

Cebu amassed 119 points and caught Sta. Elena (113) in second spot with a 222 total, with Negros a stroke behind after a 116 at Rancho Paios Verdes.

Stanford also struggled over Apo Golf, shooting a 77 for 175 to barely keep the lead in Priendship division play. Mahariika shot a day-best 90 and vaulted from fifth to second, just two points behind.

In the Sportswriters division action, Palos Verdes assembled a 108 for a 210 total and a five-point lead over Villamor, which shot 100. Sharing third with Manila Golf (96) with 200 totals was Alta Vista, which shot 106.

SEA Games veteran Bayron and Saragoza are also excaddies at Apo, and their familiarity with the 7,079-yard course made Yulo decide on fielding them only there.

Abe Rosal will see action in the final two days for Canlubang, which is seeking to win a record 13th regular titie. Former RP Am champ Jun Bernis, Romite Torrecampo, JR Tanpinco and Joseph Labajo are joining them at the rolling Palos Verdes today.

Lopez, also the Southwoods coach, said that Japanese teeners Toru Nakajima and Matsumura Michio must both post low numbers in the third round for Southwoods to have a decent shot at repeating.

Their games suit the make-up of Palos (Verdes) perfectly," Lopez said of the two Japanese. "That's why (Southwoods captain) Thirdy (Escano) opted to play them only in that course."

ILOILO CITY—TWO SUPERB SECOND-HALF GOALS FROM SOUTHEAST ASIAN Games veteran Arnie Pasinabo propelled Negros Occidental to a 2-1 nipping of Northern Cotabato and a sweep of Group A in the PFF-National Men's Open championship at the slippery La Paz field.

Adding to the pain is the fact that the 23-year-old Araneta of the Philippine Air Force is also the son of Iloilo coach Lurer.

Pacquiao willing to settle $1M case with Elorde

By Salven L. Lagumbay, Contributor

KATHER THAN FACE THE PROSPECT OF PAYING UP to $1 million (about PS2 million) to his former manager and business manager, boxing hero Manny Pacquiao has indicated that he is willing to cough up an agreed amount than "be hostaged" by what looks like a major hump to his September rematch with Mexican Icon Erik Morales.

The latest financial battle Pacquiao is facing was instigated by his former manager Martin Elorde and former business manager Sydney Jay Hall, who had filed a case against Murad Muhammad, Rod Nazario, Roberto Nazario and Philippine Boxing LLC at the Superior Court of the State of California, County of San Mateo, last year.

Electe and Hall had alleged that Muhammad's group had violated the Muhammad Ali Boxing Reform Act by not observing proper transparency in the business dealings involving Pacquiao's fights in the United States.

However, the charge was amended later to include Pacquiao as a nominal defendant in the case.

Rex "Wakee" Salud, an associate of the boning superstar, said that Elorde's claim was anchored on the fact that when Pacquiao signed the contract for his first bout with Morales, Elorde was still the legal manager of Pacquiao and Hall was still the business agent, although their contracts had lapsed when the fight took place in Las Vegas.

Originally, they wanted Mareny to pay $1 million, although Shelly Finkel was able to bring down the amount R. Catajar, E. Atate, R. All, L. Rabeto (Am), Ron. Poctobrin. to $425,000," Salud stressed.

Marmy is really hart by this latest development. He knows from his heart that had done no injustice to Marty and Sydney. His upcoming rubber match with Morales will surely be put on hold if he doesn't pay up."

Pacquiao was in St. Bernard, Southern Leyte, yesterday to distribute financial assistance to the victims to the recent landstide that hit the area.

Clark shelved as sports complex site

IT'S SACOBIA IN TARLAC, NOT CLARK Field in Pampanga that will be the site of the new modern stadium and training center to replace the old Rizal Memorial Sports Complex (RMSC) in Manifa.

Sacobia is an ideal place to build an Olympic-standard stadium," said Philippine Olympic Committee president Jose "Peping" Conjungeo in an exclusive interview with this writer. "It is elevated, cool, pollution-free and safe. Although it is part of the Clark Development Zone, Sacobia sites in Clark where toxic wastes were reportedly present."

Modesty ande, Mr. Cojuangco's words not only made me glad (over time, I have repeatedly ruled out Clark as a probable site of a new sports and training center because of toxic contamination), but also Myria Baldonado of the People's Task Force for Bases Cleanup, who once cited is still too far away from the controversial our efforts in their crusade to clean up the toxic wastes in Clark.

The RMSC has outlived its usefulness, said Coyuangeo, a former congressman from Tarlac and younger brother of former President Corazon Aquino. "Building presidency. We can't get anywhere in our quest for an Olympic gold without a modern international-standard stadium with highly technical facilities where our athletes could train properly."

Even though the country is cashstrapped, Cojuangco said he would find ways to source out the funds needed to construct the proposed modern sports complex in Sacobia. This is a welcome development for Philippine sports because the relocation of the dilapidated RMSC is long overthie. Sacobia is a vast area covering about 5,700 hectares. Former First Lady Imekla Marcos reportedly had a plan to develop the area into a modern sports complex, but before it a new stadium is a top priority at my POC could even take off the launching pad, the proposal was not completed and, eventually, overtaken by events.

> CHEERS: Despite the unhappy times, there are still people whose deeds gladden the spirit. Among them are leading horse owners and sports patrons Hermie Esguerra and Putch Puyat; Red Bull coach Yeng Guiao, who won the just-ended San Mig Coffee-PBA Fiesta Conferance championship; and the late Olympian Teofilo Yidefonso, the only Filiomo swimmer to win back-to-back bronze medals in the 200-meter breaststroke competitions of the 1928 Games in Amsterdam and the 1932 Olympics in Los Angeles. Angry Tiger rips foe Sixers prevail

CARLSBAD, CALIFORNIA-WORLD number one Tiger Woods posted the most iopsided victory in the history of the Accenture Match Play Championship on Wednesday, a 9 and 8 rout of Stephen Ames.

Woods, motivated by an injudicious pre-tournament remark by his opponent, won every hole on the front nine before halving the 10th to complete the first-round triumph.

The previous record margin of victory in the World Golf Championships event was 7 and 6.

Most of the other top seeds advanced, including Fifi's Vijay Singh, South African Renef Goosen and Phil Mickelson. South Africa's Ernie Els was the biggest casualty, beaten by Germany's Bernhard Langer 1 up. Looking ahead to his pairing with Woods, Ames had offered an anodyne "Anything can happen."

But the Trinidad-born player now

WOODS: Most lopsided victory, reures based in Canada went on to add: "Especially where he's hitting the ball."

That didn't sit well with Woods. He made mincement of his opponent, who failed to produce a single birdie.

Woods birthed the first six holes, as well as the eighth, and won the seventh and sinth with pars.

"Stephen provided it, definitely," Woods said of his motivation. "I think he understands now."

In an earlier match, Tom Lehman did not drop a shot as he outlasted Stuart Appleby, 3 and 2.

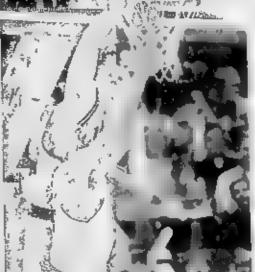

Lehman, this year's US Ryder Cup captain, played well, but he also had some help from the Australian

"Stuart didn't play his best. He gave it to me," Lehman said. "He had a 1-up read and missed two four-footers at the minth and 11th to give me back the lead. But I played very strong, no bogeys, and I had a nice birdie to finish off the match."

Lehman's second-round opponent will be another Australian, Adam Scott, who recovered from a woeful start to beat Lucas Glover 2 and 1.

Scott bogeyed the first two holes but won three holes in a row starting at the sixth to take the lead in a match that never rose to great heights.

In other early matches, Davis Love beat Australian Mark Hensby 2 and 1. while Sweden's Carl Pettersson outlasted Kenny Perry, 1 up.

LeBron James, the All-Star MVP scored 33 points and had six rebounds and five assists to lead the Cavaners.

Cheryl Burke pines for 'sinigang' ... and Oliver Platt recalls visits to RP as

LOS ANGELES-"I WISH I COULD HAVE sinigang right now," Cheryl Burke told us as she and her partner Drew Lachey of 98 Degrees compete in the final week of the top-rated TV show, "Dancing with the Cheryl, daughter of Manila-born (and raised in San Jose, Nueva Ecija) Sherri Bautista Burke, and Drew are doking it out in dance numbers against wrestler Stacy Keibler and partner Tony Dovoland, and NFL great Jerry Rice and partner Anna Trebunskaya Thursday evening (today at noon in Marula).

"A huge thank you from the heart to my felrow Filipinos," Cheryl told us in an e-mail interview. Filipinos, especially those in the US, have been avidly voting for her and Drew via phone and online polls and are expected to rally for the dancing couple. Thursday is the last chance for viewers to vote. "Yes, Drew is very much aware of the Filipmos' support and is very grateful. His band, 98 Degrees, has performed in the Philippines and he has some good memories of the Philippines and Filipinos."

The winning pair will be announced in a special finale show on Sunday evening.

Cheryl said two Pinays inspired her to dance: "My mother, Sherri Bautista-Burke, dances and competes in ballroom dancing, amateur level, with my stepdad Dr. Bob Wolf. Regretfully, I didn't get to meet my grandmother, Rosario Bautista, who passed away even before I was born. She was a high school Physical Education teacher in the 1950s and 60s who brought beauty, grace and passion through dancing and inspired high school students in San Jose, Nueva Ecija, I beheve I inherited her love for dancing."

Heath, in the title role of the legendary lover, cons Oliver into a hoax so he can have the one girl in Venice (Sienna Miller, Jude Law's on again-off again fiancée) who wants nothing to do with Casanova. Oliver said he had fun in the role although he is covered in goo in one scene. At the end of this movie that also features Jeremy Irons camping it up as a Bishop, Oliver gets Lena Olin, real-life wife of Lasse Halstrom ("Chocolat" and "The Cider House Rules"), in "The Ice Harvest," Oliver plays a drunk but, thanks to his acting skills, he makes you want to be his drinking buddy. John Cusack gets this privilege in the dark comedy that also stars Billy Bob Thornton, Randy Quaid and Connie Nielsen, whom we last saw in "The Great Raid."

OLIVER'S father is the former US ambassador to RP, Nicholas Platt.

Cheryl Burke pines for 'sinigang' her regime. He actually stayed for three tours [of duty]. It was an incredibly dangerous time for him, too. The country was shifting away from years of Marcos dictatorship to democracy and there were a lot of very angry peo-

I went to visit for two Christmases and had a great time. I was in college then and starting to do my own thing so I didn't spend as much time as I would have liked. My father goes back [to RP] all the time. My mother also does, because she became very involved in a lot of aid organizations there. As a career diplomat, my father's idea of a good time is going to a place where there's work to be done, not necessarily Paris or London, where there's a lot of parties.

How did you end up becoming an ac-

I grew up all over the world, especially in the Far East. It's not uncommon at all for people who grow up that way to go into performing arts and communications. [There's this] famous Third Culture Study, named after its conclusions ... People who are born someplace and then grow up someplace else, creare a third culture by going into the world of make-believe, the performance arts.

I moved a lot and I was never really that good at being a new kid. I didn't like it and l don't think it's good for anybody to be a new kid all the time. In one particularly difficult time, I moved from Hong Kong back to Washington when I was about 8 years old. I was enrolled in this very snorty private school. I auditioned for the Christmas play and I was cast as the innkeeper I had one line but I completely lost my bearings. I turned Mary and Joseph and the baby Jesus away from the inn and for whatever reason, the entire place went nuts. They just were so deeply entertained by the way I did it. When you're a lonely screwed up little kid and you get that kind of reaction from people, you pay attention. I started doing it all the time. It became a way for me to plug in when I got to a new place. I would audition for a play and I would have an instant group of friends.

Lena Olin shared with us that she finds you sery. She said that when she told you so. you went, "No, no, no, I am not."

First of all, I'm very flattered by that I guess it kind of goes hand in hand with [my own theory]. The people that I find attractive are people who have no idea that they're attractive. There's nothing less attractive to me than somebody who obviously thinks that they're incredibly attractive.

When you were younger, what did you do to attract the girls?

I have absolutely no clue because I don't think I was very good at it. I was always the guy who found out later that I actually had a much better chance with the women that I was interested in than I actually knew at the Part of the charm of "Casanova" is the mistaken identity plot element. Have you ever been mistaken for somebody else?

Oh, sure. I was at a "Harry Potter" premiere with my kids and some little kid walked up to me and thought that I was Hagrid without the beard (laughter), and I did the wrong thing. I told him I wasn't Hagrid. I should have just signed his thing (laughter) and given it back to him. But I said I'm not Robbie Coltrane and the kid was disappointed. I go, damn it, I didn't need to do that.

In the movie, you look much bigger than you are in real life.

I was wearing a fat suit. I have these fake teeth and we put what's called plumpers in them. I already have a plump face but they made it plumper (laughter). That's why we decided to call them plampers. At one point in the movie, you were all covered up in goo. What material was that made of?

It was basically latex, some sort of a mysterious compound of latex. They had liquid filled in it to make it move. It's disgusting but remarkable in "The Ice Harvest," you play a drunk, yet we are fascinated with your character. What do you look for in accepting this kind of role?

I look for a good story. The character Paprizzio is a beautiful piece of writing, Robert Benton and Richard Russo wrote this kind of love song to the lost American male, it's about how hard it is to be a man in America. This character is a guy who has followed all the rules-followed the handbook, get a good job, a trophy wife, a fancy car-and yet, he's miserable. It's Christmas Eve and he's terrified because he's not happy. He meets the character of John Cusack and I steal his wife while I renovate his house. I become someone who is just looking for anybody to distract him from going home.

IS IT TRUE THAT A PRETTY CORRESPONdent of ABS CBN in General Santos was sacked when news leaked that she has a love child by Manny Pacquiao? Since Pacman is a "Kapamilya," perhaps the network just wanted to do some damage control. After Joanna Rose Bacosa came out in the open about having another Pacquiao baby, will the news re-

Gov't eyes new privatization tack

Consolidation, listing of state-owned power assets

By Michelle V. Remo

THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE SAID IT was considering a proposal calling for the consolidation of state power assets into one company and listing it on the stock market.

Pinance Secretary Margarito Teves said the proposal, which came from Representative Joey Salceda, was "attractive" and that the DOF would study the legal issues concerning

"We have to make sure first what the law says. If it (the proposal) is within the boundaries of the law, then we can push for it," Teves told reporters in a press briefing.

He said the DOF was now waiting for a formal copy of the proposal.

as economic adviser to President Giona Macapagal-Arroyo, said the government should consider another way of selling its power assets to cut the delays in the privatiza-

Under his proposal, National Power Corp. (Napocor) and the Naponal Transmission Corp. (Fransco) will be consolidated into the so-called Philippine Power Transmission and Generation Corp., and the shares of the new company would be listed on the Philippine Stock Exchange (PSE)

Salceda said the government could initially sell 60 percent to the public and hold on to the remaining 40-percent stake to allow it to manage the firm during the initial years of op-

target of selling publicly the entire 60 per-Salceda, who represents Albay and serves cent, then it could look for strategic partners who would buy the unsold portion of the 60

Salceda said the government could sell its remaining 40-percent stake later and let the new majority owner take charge of the firm's management.

Salceda said the proposal already got a favorable response from officials of Power Sector Assets and Liabilities Management Corp. (PSALM), the one in charge of managing and privatizing the government's power assets.

He said PSALM was ready to make a formal proposal to the Joint Congressional Power Committee (JCPC), a unit of Congress that oversees the privatization of the government's power assets.

Salceda said the privatization plan for the Should the government fail to achieve the power sector should be given due attention since it was partly to blame for the government's fiscal problem. He noted that the government had spent some P225 billion in the last five years to pay Napocor debis.

NDC to float P10B worth of bonds

By Ronnel W. Domingo

STATE-OWNED NATIONAL Development Co. is set to float the first tranche of a planned P20-billion bond offering in March, possibly with a government guarantee, Trade Secretary Peter B, Pavila said.

Pavila yesterday said the first of the two tranches was expected to raise P10 billion but the size could be decreased "depending on the numbers that are coming in."

"The Department of Finance has expressed willingness to provide sovereign guarantee,"

The trade chief, who serves as NDC chair, said government financial institutions and major banks would take part in the flotation.

Landbank of the Philippines and Development Bank of the Philippines have been tapped as underwriters.

He said proceeds from the float would be used to pump prime the economy through infrastructure, health and agriculture projects.

Pavila said the domestic borrowing was meant to augment the government's budgetary savings of P35 billion from last year.

in an earlier interview, he said the government was sooking at spending in the first quarter some P15 billion out of the P35 billion it "saved" this year to pump prime the economy.

BTr raises bond offerings for March by P8B

THE BUREAU OF THE TREASURY HAS INcreased its bond offerings for March by P8 billion.

The Treasury said in a memo to government securities eligible dealers (GSEDS), composed mostly of banks, that the bond offering volume of P6 billion for March would be raised to P14 billion.

The size of the 5-year bonds scheduled for auction next month was doubled to P4 billion, while the 7-year bonds flotation was raised to P8 billion from P2 billion.

But National Treasurer Omar Cruz said the move, which was in line with the Treasury's debt consolidation program that started last Feb. 10, would not result in an increase in the government's total borrowing program of P75 billion for the entire first quarter.

Cruz explained that the increase in the volume of bond offerings for March would only compensate for the cancellation of the scheduled bond auctions in February.

Cruz said the auctions for 5- and 7-year bonds programmed for February were canceled. The government was programmed to raise P8 billion from the supposed bond aucnons, P4 billion for each tenor

Under the debt consolidation program, holders of old 3-, 5- and 7-year bonds who want to extend the period of their investments may exchange their holdings government securities for freshly issued bonds of the same tenors. The swap would allow the government to extend the average maturity of its

PSALM slashes manpower costs

THE POWER SECTOR ASSETS AND LIABILI ties Management Corp. (PSALM) has reduced its "manpower and related costs" by adopting the Bureau of Internal Revenue's Electronic Filing and Payment System (eFPS)

In a statement, PSALM financial services department manager Cesar Ramirez said using the BIR's online tax filing and payment mechanism had freed up a number of PSALM personnel to do other tasks even during tax-filing periods.

He said that during tax seasons, PSALM had to assign a number of employees to work full time in processing the government agency's various taxes to be able to meet deadlines.

"With the eFPS, these employees can now be assigned other tasks aside from their main responsibility. Thus, their efficiency is developed, and we don't need to hire new employees to do their job," he said.

He added that PSALM's use of the eFPS significantly slashed the processing cost of tax returns and payments, such as the costs involved in receiving, pre-processing, encoding, error handling and storage.

He said the system provided safety nets and check-and-balance measures "to ensure dependable and accurate transactions." Abiguil L. Ho

CebuPac posted slight loss in '05

HIGH PETROLEUM PRICES HAVE EATEN INTO the operating margins of Cebu Pacific Air Inc., causing it to post a net loss in 2005, despite rising passenger traffic and higher load factors.

"We operated at a slight loss due to higher fuel prices," company president Lance Gokongwei said on Wednesday.

Cebu Pacific's financial condition mirrors that of its main rival, Philippine Airlines, and most other major carriers worldwide, which continue to report losses due to the surge in the price of aviation fuel

For the first three quarters of 2005, Cebu Pacific reported a net loss of P77.3 million, reversing a P418.4-million profit during the same period in the previous year

Gokongwei declined to reveal other details on the 2005 performance but added that the firm would likely break even this year.

He said higher earnings in 2006 would be prompted by higher passenger traffic due to its new advanced booking scheme, which offered passengers substantial discounts. Descript L. Lucas WATER AND ADDRESS PROMISED FOR

THE RULING ELITE ACTS LIKE feudal landlords, controlling everything from the local economy, local politics, the police, even-we are not kidding-janitorial services.

Pre-martial law Philippines? Sorry, but we are referring to the present-day Hacienda Luisita and Central de Azucarera de Tarlac complex, the private fieldom of the Cojuangoos, whose most famous daughter is the poster girl of the Makati Business Club for governance.

CAT-the sugar refinery affiliate of, and located within, the smfe-tom Hacienda Luisita—happens to be a publicly listed company whose limited disclosures neventheless provide a glimpse of the clannish backscratching prevalent among private and family-controlled companies.

But then, what's wrong with integrating businesses and farming out related services under one family empire?

Though it makes economic sense, the problem with this incestuous arrangement is that the publicly listed refinery has other non-family shareholders who are left out in these rent-seeking arrangement

Worse, the publicly listed refinery awards contracts without competitive public bidding to private companies solely owned by the Comangeo clan, whose officers also happen to sit on the CAT board.

Thus, the publicly listed refinery chaired by Pedro Cojuangco, the exdest brother of Corazon Cojuangco-Aquino, hands out a 3.5 percent commission for every alcohol sale, and another 10 percent commission for every carbon dioxide sale, made by Tarlac Distillery Corp.

The chair/president of farlac Distillery? Jose Cojuangco Jr., younger brother of Pedro, who also is a CAT director and vice president

The arrangement continues with the Luisita Marketing Corp., which receives a one percent commission on sugar trading and tolling fee from the refinery.

COCKTALES

Victor C. Agustin

Luisita Marketing's president? Jose Comangeo Jr. Even better, the clan's holding company, Jose Copuangeo and Sons Inc., still runs a management contract, a holdover from the protectionist era, for the refinery.

For this privilege, Jose Comangeo and Sons receives an undisclosed fixed management fee and a percentage of the net profit of the refinery, on top-agam, we kid you not-of the 5-percent share of the refinery's net profit that the CAT board members themselves receive.

In other words, members of the Cojuangco clan not only get a cut in the company profits, they also get a cut in the company operations, and another cut in the related services farmed out by themselves to themselves.

How do the Copuangos treat these abraso arrangements?

"The Company (meaning, the Central de Azucarera de Tariac), and the foregoing related parties, except directors and officers, have common shareholders, CAT declared in its 2005 annual report audited, as it has been so in the last two decades, by SGV

The CAT declaration, to use polite legalese, represents material misrepresentation.

AS THE TANKS WERE ROLLING along the side streets of Edsa 20 years ago during the peaceful People Power Revolution, Judith Pajaro was busy with renovations of her newly-bought home in New Mantla and putting final touches to gowns.

Yes, despite political upheavals, peopie still get married, she points out.

Judith owns Via Firenze (Florence way), a haute coutour shop in Glorieta that turned 20 years old last May. She says she recalls that as workers were hammering in her house, she could hear the helicopters flying into Camp Aguinardo.

had always been fascinated with dressmaking EDSA BABIES and recalls hanging out for hours in the neighthe retazos or left-over pieces of cloth and play with these. She would watch her mother embroider on their house clothes. But becoming a dressmaker was not an option for a family like theirs, she says. So she studied banking and finance at St. Paul College in Dumaguete and worked briefly for an insurance firm. Her love for making clothes however remained so she studied fashion at the Slim's Institute of Fashion.

She met a man who co-owned a shoe shop at the then Quad commercial center (now Glonetta) Judith asked for a small space to sed RTWs made of linen. It did well and she convinced the man, who later became her husband, to sell his shares in the boutique so they can go on their own.

They used the proceeds to buy the New Manila house at a time when real estate prices were rock bottom in Manila. She used the property to set up her residence and atelier. She also opened a shop in Quad for her linen clothes and named this Via Firenze

Early in her foray unto clothes. Judith noticed that it was the rich who were buying her linen line. One day she tested the waters for wedding gowns.She did well and this became the rationale for opening an atener in her

She would ask for leading to the Edsa I People Power revolution, the failed coup attempts that characterized the administration of then President Corazon Aquino, the Asian crisis, the current political turmoil, Judith says her sales have not been affected by the political and economic upheavals.

Which is why even at the height of the Edsa revolution she had orders to serve.

Somehow she has a big clientele among the wives of military personnel. Word of mouth was how she got clients. Judith does over 100 gowns a month and during the peak months of October to December she does over 200.

She has dressed four generations of some families -from the grandmother to the grandaughter From weddings gowns to ball gowns, Judith has dressed thousands of women the past 20 years.

Asked to summarize her staying power, Judith says, "My market is the rich; my clients are comfortable with me-I give them what they want although I al-

When she started, Judith had two sewing machines and two sewers. She did the cutting and the ironing; her husband would deliver the gowns.

Today she has a staff of 28 made up of ten sewers, 12 beaders, cutters. She provides some of her people free board and lodging.

Ironically her dream is to have a one-woman fashion show. She has done mini-shows or joined others but never a solo show. The problem she says is she does not have the time to make gowns for a show as her staff is focused on filling the orders.

Even after 20 years in the business, Judith purs in 15 hour workdays, starting at 10 m the morning to one in the morning.

She has clients who buy her gowns in bulk and sell it abroad-to as far as Norway and Hawaii. Balikbayans are among her clients. She says she has an account with UPS and DHL for the delivery of these gowns.

As to when she it op, she quips she still has a du glac. in first year high school who has dreams of studying fashion abroad. And a son who wants to take his Master's out of the

Malagos: More than just an orchid garden

By Germeiina Lacorte PDI Mundanao Bureau

DAVAO CITY -FROM A 600-SQUARE MEter garden that his mother, Charita Puentespina, used to lease beside his father's office in Agdao, the Puentespina orchid farm has grown over the years to include a mountain resort and has created a name as a major player in the country's cutflower business.

But a couple of years before the first Edsa uprising, Angel Puentespina, general manager of the Malagos Orchid Garden Resort, recalls the family wanted to relocate their business to Manila.

Those were the dark years in Davao city, which earned the tag as "killing fields," when it became a raging battleground be-tween the "sparrow unit" of the communist

New People's Army (NPA) and the police. "People then were put in the middle," recalls Puentespina, who was still studying at the UP Los Banos

But Edsa People Power came and after a few years, the situation seemed to have stabilized.

Now, the new investments that are pouring in the city mainly come from local capital, which reflects business confidence, says Roberto Teo, head of the Davao city Investment Promotion Center (DCIPC) in a separate interview.

Teo points that this is a contrast from the past when the uncertainty pushed people with capital to pack up and leave the country and keep their money elsewhere

"Now, they feel secure. They're using their money to build buildings," he tells the INQUEST.

For the Puentespinas, who started small in the late 1970s, it was during the years after the Edsa revolution that the company grew. "At that time, it was just a case of coming up with the products and putting it in the market," says Puentespina. "We got into the business and we proneered," he says

In 1985, Charita Puentespina was the first to successfully culture the "endangered" orchid waling-waling found only in the forests of Mt. Apo, that was fast disappearing because of forest degradation. Her waling-waling won the Best in Show Award during the Ruby Anniversary Exhibition of the Philippine Orchid Society.

In the '90s, the Puentespina's business expanded. Prior to the 1997 Asian crisis, Puentespina says the banking institutions were awash with cash and were very supportive of business endeavors. Briefly, they went into exports and stopped for a while when they saw a more lucrative demand in the local market. But in 2002, they resumed cutflower exports to Japan.

He attributed part of that success to the environment that the government provided for business to thrive.

The business got all the attention because pioneered and when it got good attention, it got good promotion, somehow," he says.

But it was also the creative spirit in the family that allowed the business to thrive. From the cutflower business that the family matriarch started, the business eventually expanded to include a sprawling 12-hectare mountain resort, which is actually a showcase of gardens and plants in Malagos. The Malagos Garden Resort, which opened in 1995, features an interactive bird show with different bird species from macaws, hornbills, raptors and crows, bird park and feeding dome, a waling-waling forest, an orchid farm, a pening 200 and the sculptures of the National Artist Napoleon Abueva, tucked into different nooks and groves of the resort.

In 2001, it opened one of the first butterfly sanctuaries in the country.

Since tourism is not yet very rosy, the family business is constantly looking for ways to be efficient. To save on costs, they ventured to develop new products—such as soap and virgin coconut oil -- and experimented on making wine from Bignay tree, a species indigenous in the Philippines.

It came as a surprise that more people liked it and came to ask for it.

"People who look at us would say, these guys must be crazy," says Puentespina, adding that their kind of business is not the kind that turns money very quickly.

It takes time to nurture nature, he says. No one else is breeding indigenous plant materials as a protection for the future. In a very subtle way, we are promoting biodiversity and we're saving the environment," he adds.

Business outlook has totally changed 20 years after Edsa.

Puentespina said that with the entry of budget airlines in the city, he expects tourism to pick up.

7 books to read ... plus more

HERE'S A SHORT LIST OF OUR RECOMmended books as seen on the shelves of Powerbooks in Greenbelt, Makati.

1. The E-Myth Revisited. Why Most Small Businesses Don't Work and What to Do About it. By Michael Gerber. (P1,297/Harper Collins). This will be an eye-opener for many of our readers who are small business owners. Read it if you want to make the transition from being owned by your business (i.e. "self employed") to being a real "business owner" Gerber was in Singapore to conduct a seminar and will be back in the Lion City this March or April. We'll keep you informed if he does.

2. How to Become a Marketing Superstar Unexpected Rules that Ring the Cash Register Jeffrey J. Pox. (P815/Hyperion). If this book does help you become a marketing superstar, please do write to us about it. Just don't get caught reading this while you're in the office, or your boss might thank that you're after his job.

3. Rising Tide. Lessons from 165 Years of Brand Building at P&G. Davis Dyer, Frederick Dalzell, Rowena Olegario. (P2,229/Harvard Business School Press). If you want to get a brand management education without working at P&G, this may be the next best thing.

4. The Effective Executive A Journal for Getting the Right Things Done. Peter Drucker. (P1,209/Harper Collins). The management guru of gurus passed away last November, but his books are still around to 'mentor' you.

5. Asia's Star Brands. Paul Temporal (P1,379/Wiley). A laundry list of Asian brands from Osim to LG-that have invaded the modern world and taken away the stigma of being, well, 'Asian.' Temporal also co-wrote The 22 Immurable Laws of Marketing in Asia with Jack Trout and Al Ries.

6. Pour Your Heart Into It. How Starbucks Built a Company-One Cup at a Time. Howard Schultz (founder and Chairman of Starbucks) and Dori Jones Yang. (P769/Hyperion). This book was first published in 1997. We've been hearing about it and looking for it ever since. An inspiring read even for the most juded entrepreneur who still cringes at paying P110 for a tall café latte. Starbucks-whose brand was helped by word-of-mouth and great PR-makes a case for this next recommended book on our list.

7. The Pall of Advertising and The Rise of PR. (Harper Business/about P1,000) Al Ries and Laura Ries. A controversial book that was-or still 15-a wake-up call for an advertising industry obsessed with winning creative awards. PR practimoners, of course, love every page of this book.

And now this column segues to our bi-weekly hosting of Al Ries' brand marketing advice. O: In your last book, The Pall of Advertising

& the Rise of PR, you wrote that advertising forgot its selling characteristic and has focused instead on creativity. Can you explain this? Al Ries: Over several decades, advertising many ways advertising is like spam on the internet. It's not behevable because there is too much of it and the messages are self-serving. Public relations or PR has many disadvantages. You can't control the media, you can't control the timing, and you can't control the message. But it has one major advantage, PR has credibility. Consumers rend to beheve what they read in the editorial pages of newspapers and magazines and what they hear on radio and television from independent people, it's what we call "the third party effect." What others say about you has credibility.

PR and advertising can work together. Use PR first to create credibility for the brand. Then use Advertising second to reaffirm and reinforce that credibility,

We recommend that companies launch new brands with PR only. Then when the brand has awareness and credibility in the mind, the company can switch to advertising to maintain the brand

Our guest columnist, Al Ries, will be in Marula on June 23 to do a one-day marketing confer cace sponsored by The Inquirer Executive Seminar Series. If you have any questions for us or for Al Ries send them to us at Murketing Rx@pkhtD-St. net or text us at 0919-314-5412

GMA NETWORK INC. IS EXPECTING ITS 2005 earnings to hit P9.4 billion, higher than rear-ago's about P7.8 billion, on the back of increased airtime revenue from its free television, Channel 7.

GMA Network chair Felipe Gozon told reporters at the sidelines of the Philippine Center for Entrepreneurship's Go Negosyo Summut yesterday that as revenues rose, expenses also swelled due to increased programs, the taunch of its second free television channel (QTV) last November and the expansion of its facilities here and abroad.

Gozon, however, declined to reveal the numbers pending the completion of its audited report. Gozon said that based on the company unaudired financial report, GMA 7 was able to hit its P2-billion profit target. This was 33 percent higher than the P1.5 billion profit in 2004. In 2004, the posted a profit growth of 42 percent. Por 2006, Gozon said GMA7 was looking at a "modest but still double-digit growth" in profit amid increasing expenses related to the company's continuing expansion. GMA 7 embarked on three major projects last year. These are the overseas expansion, the new programming for Channel 11 dubbed as Quality TV or QTV, and the improvement of GMA 7's presence in major provincial markets.

It has expanded its program distribution to other countries such as the Middle East, and is planning to further expand to Europe, Australia and Hong Kong with new programs.

Despite its growing profitability, Gozon said the network might have to push back its proposed initial public offering from March to May of this year due to delays in the completion of its financial reports. The plan is to sell 20 percent of the company's outstanding expanded capital. Earlier, sources said GMA 7's plan was to raise between P6 billion and P9 billion for the shareholders and the company. The final size of the offer has yet to be announced.

GMA7 plans to offer Philippine Deposit Receipts (PDRs) to foreign investors through a newhy-formed company dubbed GMA Holdings Inc.

As part of the IPO, GMA7 will also issue new and secondary shares.

BSP sees more robust, competitive banking sector

By Dorls C. Dumiao

AS MORE STRINGENT REGULATIONS come into pay, the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipmas expects the banking industry to consolidate faster with only a few banks left to dominate the field.

In his keynote address during the national branch managers' convention of Metropolitan Bank & Trust Co., BSP Deputy Governor for bank supervision and examination Nestor Espenilla Jr. said the banking industry would see more meaningful changes in the coming years as more international best practices are fully adopt-Esperallia said consolidation would capital adequacy framework. be prompted by a stronger regulatory framework, stiffer competition posed by existing foreign banks, new foreign investors coming into existing banks, and the technical demands posed by modern banking and finance standards.

We see a banking landscape dominated by a relative handful of main banks complemented by a plethora of smaller banks that serve various welldefined market niches," he said.

stringent International Accounting Standards, the BSP is overhauling its regulations in line with the Basic 2

Espenilla also said the BSP would continue its strong advocacy for the enactment of the Credit Information

This will pave the way for the establishment of a truly comprehensive credit information system that is expected to lower the cost of credit, provide greater access to credit in general, and reduce the dependency on collateral-based lending," he said.

Metrobank vice chair Arthur V. Ty Aside from the shift to the more said that Metrobank, for its part, has put in place measures to upgrade service quality, customer analytics, and product and service marketing.

Call for 'new' People Power

By Ernesto M. Ordoňez

THIS WEEK MARKS THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY of the People Power that toppled a dictatorship.

Today, other forms of people power are needed to topple other kinds of oppression.

One kind of oppression is the mandatory environment insurance coverage

This requires additional insurance premiums from firms that pose no threat to the environment, such as those with certificates of

A CNC is the certification by the DENR that a project has negligible unpact on the environment. So why the required added insurance?

The MEIC, considered a useless expense and an oppressive government imposition, discourages investors from investing in food processing COMMENTARY areas, which is so necessary for agricultural development But how can Alyansa alone change this DENR order? Enter a different form of people power.

The Alvansa linked with other organizations, including FPI, Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, PhilExport, Philippine Business for Environment, Air and Water Management Association and local industry associations to oppose the MEIC.

Upon receiving position papers from these firms, DENR Secretary Angelo Reyes acted promptly and undefinitely suspended the MEIC.

Power of the poor

Right after the announcement, a group of upland farmer and mangrove fisherfolk leaders met with Secretary Reyes

They met with him to press their case on the restoration of cancelled Community Based Forest Management Agreements (CBFMAs)

They represent upland farmers who cover 1.9 million of the 4 million hectares of upland forests, and mangrove fishers with CBFMAs covering 200,000 hectares of mangrove plantations.

Another form

Instead of just submitting position papers, the farmer and fisherfolk leaders came from as far away as Mindanao to appeal personally as a united group to the newly installed DENR secretary.

Josefina Campo, president of all the CBFMA contract holders nationwide, said: "DENR should revoke the unjustified CBFMA cancellations unmediately. They are not only depriving us of our livelihood. They are also endangering our environment because no one is looking after the areas we used to take care of."

Rather than initiating legal action against the DENR or filing for a temporary restraining order (TRO) on the CBFMAs, these leaders have placed their fauth in Secretary Reyes. During their meeting with Secretary Reyes, an Industrialist offered to assist them by supplementing their people power with legal action

In response, Arsenio Tanchuling, Tambuyog Development Center executive director, said: "If even this action fails, we will show a different form of people power that may be more risky. But it will protect our basic rights."

Where there is good governance, there is no need for people power.

Today, there are pockets of clearly bad governance, such as the MEIC implementation and the CBFMA cancellations.

Different forms of people power must now

Before violent action is used out of desperation, government officials should respond to the peaceful forms of people power with the same good governance, political will and speed shown by Secretary Reyes when he suspended the MEIC implementation.

Ho and behold

Shanghai-based Taiwanese heartthrob Peter Ho is in town to pose for Bench Body

Text by Alex Y. Vergara Photos by Patrick Uy

HE SECOND TIME IS NEVER as nerve-wracking as the first. Shanghai-based Taiwanese heartthrob Peter Ho found this out for himself when he stepped anew in front of the cameras with nothing but his undies on.

The soft-spoken star of the TV soap "Love of the Aegean Sea" recently flew to Manila to do a series of photo shoots featuring him in Bench

Body's latest Intimate apparel The images will appear on billboards and posters in Shanghai, Xiamen, Xian, Hangzhou and other big Chinese cities where Bench Body is sold.

Ho, who took up graphic design in Canada, finds doing comedy much harder than doing drama. Nothing, however, can compare to what he felt last year when he did his very shoot also for Bench Body.

"I found it very hard to pose," he says of the expenence. "It was my first underwear commercial and I felt naked. I knew that everyone would be staring not only at the product, but what's underneath it."

This time, though, Ho's more relaxed about the entire expenence. Bench Body, he says, has a way of making a supposedly racy exercise into something bordering on wholesome. For one, he doesn't feel compelled by people behind the product to do suggestive poses.

"Bench opened my mind," he says. "Now it's my turn, through the product, to educate everyone that underwear has become a fashion statement."

But the initial campaign did create quite a stir, as Ho's fans, composed mostly of women, began talking about it in various websites. Most people's impression of him soon changed as well when they saw images of him spiashed on major highways.

"Before the commercial came out, a lot of people thought that I was quite fragile and bong," he says. "What they didn't know was I worked pretty hard at the gym to get that kind of body. Yes, I'm getting some attention because of it."

Sexy scenes

In fact, not a few of China's influential movie directors complimented him for his "yummy" images. He may have turned 30 last Sept. 13, but

Chic opening of chic flagship store

INDERELLA IS REALLY ON a roll these days. The movers and shakers of the fashion set, in fact, were there to witness the grand opening of its new flagship store in Megamall.

This pioneering fashion brand has as its motto the 3 C's-challenge, change and commitment. That motto is reflected in the fantastic store designed by Phased of Singapore. Its clean white walls now have stylish murals by Rina Albert.

The winter-chall theme of the launch was complemented by the launching of the Esprit Privilege Card. No less than our favorite fash. ion shopper, palangga Jenni Epperson, host ed the chic launch of the card. She also hosted the fantastic fashion treat from the luxury shoe brand, Clarks, natch1

Talented couturier Rhett Eala, turned DJ for the night, spinning cool house grooves as top models strutted their stuff on the catwalk. Models also wore Esprit's trendy jurnor collection.

More surprises? You bet, palanggas. Cinderella also launched its newest baby, Greature a la Mode, a project of Marielle C, Santos. The line gives us several tres exclusive collections from our very own fashion designers such as Kate Torralba, Tippi Ocampo, Reian Mata, LZ Punzalan and Irene Pine- Arcache da, dahlungs.

The highlight, naturallement, was the unveiling of the awesome new Cinderella shop by glamour women led by Myrza Sison of Marie Claire and Esprit marketing manager for wholesale in Asia Mary Tse, who jetted in from Hong Kong. The launch also gave away prizes to lucky invitees.

the boyish-looking Ho doesn't look a day over

Apart from starring in movies and soaps, Ho also sings and does recording. Before he was lured into show biz, the young man dreamt of becoming a cartoonist. That dream has had to take a backseat, however, when a producer heard him sing at a karaoke bar in Taiwan several years ago.

"He signed me up and that started it," he says. "In fact, I wasn't aware that I could sing until I was a teenager. As a child, I never listened to music because I was more occupied with drawing."

Although he was born in the United States, Ho firushed grade school and high school in Taiwan. Most of the teachers and mins in the Catholic school he went to were Filipinos. Ho earned his secondary education in an

Beautiful day and night

ROBINSONS DEPARTMENT STORE (RDS) IS holding a beauty fair until Feb. 28 It asked Preview Magazine's beauty editor, Agoo Benzon, to give RDS shoppers makeup tips for daytime and evening activities.

"Wear regular makeup during the day, something fresh you can wear with anything," says Benzon. Soft, natural, light and understated is this year's trend.

She advises white for the eyelids, red for the lips and satin or pastel for the cheeks. "Stay sheer and sublime by wearing light hues." A pink or peach brush, pastel eye colors, mascara and a tinted hp balm are good for any daytime clothing, occasion or mood.

Nighttime

For after-6 gimmicks, a little add-on is enough. If you don't have enough time to start over, work with the makeup you appued previously. The most important change will be your eyes.

"Go smoky or do a wingrip," says Benzon. Elther way, they lift droopy looking has and bring drama to your look.

"You may also add color or gloss for shimmery lips, dab a brighter cheek tint for that added glow or put on more mascara." Be free to use brighter or more dramatic shades for a beautiful, soft, alluring and vibrant look. It's wise to carry along a multipurpose product such as a lip-cheek-eye

Pick a feature and make it pop. But "enhancing" is far different from "exaggerating." To avoid the scary overdone look, focus on a specific area that you want to enhance.

More tips

"Less is best" should be everyone's mantra. Have the basics with you always: foundation or tinted moisturizer, concealer, eyelash curier, mascara, eyenner, neutral color for tids, cheek color and lipstick or gloss. Brow groomers are important, too, as eyebrows frame the face.

~Aside from protecting the face, makeup also heips contour its shape. Those with round or chubby face should use a darker shade of powder for the cheekbone, chin and jawline, then apply light cheek colors right on top of the apple. Those with longer faces should extend the eyebrows, widen the eyes and emphasize the lids with the proper eye colors.

It is also important to choose the right foundation. "No matter how great the colors you're wearing, you'll only get that 'floating neck' problem if you have the wrong shade," says Benzon. To try, apply it on your jawline and be sure to dab a significant amount to see if it really blends.

A vast array of quality makeup and beauty products are up for grabs at Robinsons Department Stores' Beauty Fair, including Pond's, Dove, Maxi Peel, Block & White, Johnson & Johnson, Colgare-Palmolive, Nivea, Mreal, Maybelline, Max Pactor, Revion, VMV Hypoallergenics, and Ever Bilena, as well as Hugo Boss and Lacoste fragrances. Shoppers also get to pick prizes and take home freebics.

The Beauty Fair is ongoing until Feb. 28 at all Robinsons Department Store branches located in all Robinsons Malls, Wanermart Malls, Tutuban Center, Metropolis Star and Festival Mall In Alabang and Nepo Mall Pampanga.

Fashion power bloc emerges in the Oscars

THE RACE FOR THE OSCARS IS ON, AND that means not only the acting awards. The global audience will be glued to the television on March 5 to find out not only the winners but which designer or what fashion brand the stars will wear.

And the big question behind that big question is, who are the power fashion publicists who can snag the stars for their fashion-designer or fashion house chents?

Fashion publicists, who represent designers and fashion houses, and the stylists, who make over the stars for their red-carpet walk, make up the latest power bloc of the global film awards industry. More and more, their names pop up in Women's Wear Daily and the fashion glossres.

Among the powerful publicists is Susan Ashbrook, whose clients include Lanvin, Escada and our own Momque Lhuillier. Ashbrook opened Film Pashion and linked up stars like Charleze Theron with Lhuillier and Lanvin in previous Oscars.

Next week, at the 78th annual Academy

Awards, the hot names to dress up, according to WWD, are Oscars favorites Reese Witherspoon ("Walk the Line"), Keira Knightley, Charlize, Peheity Huffman, Rachel Wessz and Michelle Williams ("Brokeback Mountain").

Nobody knows for sure who will wear what until you see these Hollywood scons strutting on

I was just on the phone this week with Monique's mother, Amparito Lhuillier, Cebu's society doyenne and famous jeweler. She was in Los Angeles with-Monique and husband Tom Bugbee, relisting the role of lola to Monique and Tom's newborn son. Even on the phone you could feel the energy that was built up around the new beby. The fuss wasn't so much about the Oscars and which stars would wear a Monique Lhuillier, but around the new addition. to the family and Monique's motheritood. The family is readying up for the baptism this Sun-

Even WWD, in its Oscars report last week, mentioned Monique's motherhood and quoted the designer saying that no one would really know which gown a star would slip on for the Oscars until the last moment. At this point it is heartwarming enough to know that Monique Lhuillier is already on the radar screen of the Oscars fashion media. That was the next tough feat for this young Cebuano-born designer, after having crashed into US fushion less than five? years ago.

It was Giorgio Armani, two decades ago, who turned the Oscars into a fashion-watching frenzy by dressing up the Oscars frontrumers—the women and the gents. Name the Hollywood star, he or she wore Armani to the Oscart: Jodie Poster, Tom Hanks, among others.

WWD says Armani remains a strong favorité today, particularly because he has a strong team well-networked right in Hollywood. Charlize has just worn Armani to the Screen Actor Guild Awards in the run-up to the Oscars.

Armani, however, told WWD about his disappointment that Ziyi Zhang wasn't nominated for this year's Oscars. "I am naturally disappointed that Ziyi Zhang was not nominated given her compelling performance in Memoirs of a Geisha.' Ziyi also always lights up the red car-

The Oscars almost always puts a new designer or fashion house on the world map. Among the latest additions in the fickle fashion galaxy is Marchesa, the erstwhile unknown brand worn by Felicity Huffman ("Desperate Housewives") in the Golden Globes. This is a new London brand designed by twentysomething wonten Keren Craig and Georgina Chapman.

And of course, our very own Rajo Laures, who's dressing up Oscars nominee Pia Clemente, just might be the new Oscars brand for 2006.

TELY, I'VE BEEN PINCHING my hubby's button-down shirts (sorry, hon) to wear. Ever since Gemma Ward strutted down the catwalk wearing this season's Hermès shirtdress, my other half has never stressed about not having anything to wear (oops).

The return of menswear-inspired clothes is not a way to get back at husbands, boyfriends or lovers, but is a reflection of today's women—ourspoken, strong and on the go. It's the utilitarian touch to your everyday attire.

Anme Hall's '70s style is a tad frumpy compared to this season's sleek suits and slim ties, but the idea is to raid your partner's closet. Use his oversize button-down shirt as a dress, then cinch his necktie over it and, as a finish-

You can also wear his vest as a top paired with your rightest pencil skirt and long-strand pearls.

Ask any man. There's nothing sexier and cooler than a woman wearing his togs and making it her own. It shows you're creative, independent and irresistibly hot!

But if you can't raid your man's locker, there's nothing to stop you from raiding his favorite shops. Try Topman or better yet Topshop. They have one of the coolest and hippest menswear-inspired threads (luckily in your size).

Plot your style attack and conquer the office. To get what you want in a man's world, you gotta have the balls, brains and (sometimes) wear boxers to do it.

WATCHIN

By Alex Y. Vergara

PRACTICAL MAN CAN make do with just one watch. But if you're the whimsical type who insist on buying a fourth, fifth or even sixth watch to beef up your collection of timepieces, then it's best that you base your decision on how a new acquisition can complement your wardrobe.

"The days when you were stuck with just one or two watches are long gone," says Lorenz Manalang, marketing manager of L Time Studio. "Since watches are the safest and most functional form of accessory, they've also become a fashion statement over the years *

By introducing the concept of watches not as ,ewelry, but as fashion accessories in the late '80s, L Time Studio is a pioneer of sorts in the competitive and crowded watch-retail

Due to advances in technology, watches have also become more affordable and now come in various designs and makes.

Changing your watch has become as common as changing your outfit," Mana ang adds. "In fact, it's now common for some people to carry several watches with them. They wear different / pieces as the day progresses to fit their outfit and

Before the likes of L Time Studio came to the scene, watches sold along Avenida Rizal and Cubao played a supporting role to more expensive jewelry pieces. Not anymore, as watches have now become stars in their own right

The mall explosion has also Armani, given L Time Studio and its competitors more accessible venues to exclusively showcase their timepieces (no jewelry, please) to a younger, happer crowd

In keeping with the needs of the young and the fashionista, every L Time Studio outlet is outfitted with store. How come?

"So that shoppers can look at themselves while wearing watches they intend to buy," Manalang explains. They're no longer confined to looking at their wrists or asking their companions if certain pieces look good on

New styles

And since trends change with the season, L Time Studio constantly finds useif introducing new styles to the market. The first quarter of the year heralds five new men's watches from DKNY, Diesel, Emporio Armani, Fossil and Hong Kong-based brand ODM. DKNY's 70s-inspired rectangular faced time check (NY3643) brushed silver finish with a smooth black leather strap are perfect for those in a retro mode. Its senu-gloss black dial with a red LED display has a "back to the future" EMPORIO fee, to it. Perfect for the disco! In keeping with its young, offcenter sensibilities (whether they're jeans or watches), Diesel has again come up with an innovatively designed watch (DZ4060) that combines bold color and creative construction.

The asymmetrical stainless-steel case is accented by a series of black aluminum rings and yellow dial. In found in a bazaar or department heu of a square-faced dial, this edition comes with a round one to appeal to the classy yet creative bunch.

For men who go for a vintage yet modern look, Fossil's latest offering (JR8985) with a distressed brown leather strap, heavy topstitching and degraded dial is for them. This quartz watch has a stainless-steel case with a brush finish.

If you love big yet elegant state-ment pieces then check out Emporio Armani's 50-mm number (AR0514) If not for its bold face, the watch is a classic item with a champagne dial, brushed stainless-steel case and genume leather strap.

Finally, for the super trendy man who thrives on novelty and gimmicks ODM's award-winning candy blue timepiece (DD991) with a "shake' function is the ideal must have

Winner of the presugious Red Doi design award in Basel, Switzerland. ODM's "Mysterious" series are but ton-less watches whose time and cal endar modes are activated by the shake of the wrist. Certain model come with a so-called electro-lum nescent backlight.

Still confused as to what watch to buy? Well, there's always room i your drawer for five more, don't yo think? Like women and shoes, the same applies to men and watches You can never have enough of them.

LOVE TO CHECK you will need at least three shades, it is best to pick out magazines for monochromatic colors to use if you are a beginner. It may sound complicated, but it isn't actually. The medium tone goes on your lids, the darker shade on the outer lid close to your lash line, and finally the lightest on your brow bone for highlight.

If you opt for more vivid shades, make sure to swipe a little at a time. It is easier to layer than try to remove too much color that's already been applied. It is best to experiment with different colors until you find the best for you. My advice is to check out less-expensive brands when experimenting.

Truth is, because of my hunt for the best eye shadow that isn't expensive, I have discovered brands that are good to try out, like fashion 21, Ever Bilena and Fenny Serrano. I've learned that makeup doesn't have to be expensive for it

Smoke gets in her eyes

MAKEUP that makes your eyes look bigger

By Barbi Chan Contributor

AS I MENTIONED BEFORE IN MY earlier makeover, there are two types of the chinita or chinky-eyed looks the almond-shaped double-eyelid type, and the pure-blooded Asian eye-no crease, smooth surface, very small eyes. This type is usually the hardest to put on makeup because of the lack of space between the evebrows and eyes.

The common mistake that we do is to create a "double-eyelid" effect. We draw a fake crease and try to do some highlighting to give the illusion of a bigger eye or of "Western eyes." This may look good from afar, but it is a different story if you take a closer look.

Our model Eira told me that she always has a hard time putting on makeup or having her makeup done because of her unusually small eyes. The makeup person either makes her eyes really dark or deprive it of color. I want to give her that look with natural yet big eyes.

The common mistake that we do is to create a 'double-eyelid' effect

Base. For sheer coverage, I used BOreal's True Match in Rose Sand, I applied it first under her eyes to conceal dark circles and then blended it downwards. I used minimal base because I want her skin to be appreciated.

Eyebrows. Her eyebrows, if you notice, are somewhat droopy and very sparse. I trimmed the outer ends a little to give the illusion of "lifted eyes." Then I extended her inner brows using lightbrown eyebrow pencil.

Neutral colors

Eves, I used neutral colors. For the eyeshadow base, I used Awake Stardom Liquid Color in Champagne. I started at the base of the upper lash and blended it upward to the brow bone. Then I used Maybelline Color Wear Trio Eyeshadow т Сарриссіпо.

This palette consists of three shadesbrown, lilac and cream. I used the brown one and started at the base of the upper lash and blended it again up to the middle of the brow area. This will give the illusion of thicker eyelashes and bigger eyes.

After eyeshadow, I lined her eyes with a liquid eyeliner for that deep-set effect, In order for her to have that "opened eyes," I curled her lashes and applied a lengthening mascara. Nice one to try is Model Co. mascara in black.

Blush. Since the focus of her face is the eyes, I applied minimal blush on her.

I wanted her to look very natural so 1 used a cherry-pink blusher. I started at the center of her cheeks and applied the blush on a circular motion.

Lips. I used a lip liner first to outline her lips since she has thin lips. Then I just added lip gloss in the middle.

Our model has always had long straight hair. I convinced her to have it permed and to cut her bangs for a youthful look. Fortunately after much prodding she agreed

We women in general are so afraid to change their makeup and the way they dress. But how will we know what looks good on us if we don't even want to try?

Don't be afraid. Embrace the change. If it doesn't work out, at least you can always tell yourself you tried.

STATE PROSECUTORS FILED coup d'etat and rebellion charges against Sen. Gregorio Honasan before the Makati Regional Trial Court yesterday, hours after Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez said the former soldier was among the at first to be arrested in the wake of the President's declaration of a state of emergency.

The Department of Justice prosecutors recommended no bail for Honasan, who was specifically indicted for his alleged part in the failed July 2003 Oakwood Mutiny. Although the four-page indictment was dated Jan. 18, it was filed only at 4:20 p.m. yesterday.

Charged with Honasan were four retired military officers - Col. Ernesto Macahiya, Capt. Felix Turingan, Col. Virgilio Briones and Col. Romeo Lazo, all officials of Philippine Guardian Brotherhood Inc.

Also named in the charge sheet were members of Honasan's staff at the Senate identified as George Duldulao and Lina Reyes along with a number John and Jane Does.

'I will not go with you. We will all die here,' he tells escorts

DEPOSED PRESIDENT ESTRADA barricaded himself inside his hospital room at the San Juan Medical Center after his police escorts tried to force him to return to his rest house in Tanay, Rizal, early yesterday morn-

In an interview with dzMM radio, Estrada said he was woken up at about 3 a.m. with a loud banging at the door by Chief Supt. Edgardo Doromal, director of the Philippine National Police Security and Protection Office, and his men.

"I will not go with you. I will resist, we will all die here," the ex-movie actor quoted hunself as telling Doromal.

Estrada said Doromal could not produce an order from the Sandiganbayan directing the police to return him to detention in Tanay.

He said it was the Sandiganbayan Special Division that allowed him to be taken to the hospital, and only the anti-graft court trying him on plunder and perjury charges could order him back.

Estrada said that after Doromal's attempt to take him, he decided to lock himself inside the hospital room

Sandiganbayan Sheriff Ed Urieta said he was informed that the PNP would no longer attempt to return Estrada to Tanay, until after his operation, or a court order was issued to that effect. He said the police would just secure Estrada inside the hospital.

Meanwhile, some 500 Estrada supporters surrounded the hospital to "protect the President" from his police escorts.

According to San Juan Mayor JV Ejercito, Estrada's son, they would not allow Estrada's escorts to "illegally" take him away.

Estrada was brought to the SJMC Thursday, after complaining of severe pain in his eye. He is scheduled for eye surgery and expects to remain in the hospital until Tuesday.

'La Niña' not so bad, says Pag-asa

By Blanche S.

THE LA NIÑA PREdicted to hit the country in coming months would not be as severe as that of 1998 which caused flash floods that killed thousands of people and destroyed hundreds of millions of pesos' worth of crops, the weather bureau said.

All indications, including the late development of the climatic conditions and the amount of rainfall, show that the developing La Niña would be more like that of 1995, according to the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Services Administration.

"The 2005-2006 developing La Niña is more similar to the 1995-1996 La Niña... which suggests a very wet March-May 2006 period," Pagasa climatology chief Flaviana D. Hilario said

La Niña is a term used by meteorologists to describe unusually cool sea surface temperatures in the Pacific Ocean which spawn heavy rains. Changes in the atmospheric pressure for the Pacific, calculated by comparing air pressure between Tahiti and Darwin, Australia, are also inked to La Niña events.

"The current situation is different from past events. It's very uncertain in terms of impacts and implications... La Niña is developing so late in the year, which is very unusual," Hilario said.

Pagasa has warned that areas in the eastern seaboard would be hardest hit by the looming La Niña, among them Cagayan Valley, Isabela, Southern Leyte, Leyte, Agusan del Norte and Sur, Davao Oriental, Samar, Arrora, and the Bicol provinces.

On Friday last week, a mudshde caused by heavy rains in St. Bernard, Southern Leyte has already buried an entire village of 1,800 people.

The rains which drenched Mindoro, Palawan, Camarines Sur, Iloilo and Quezon in December last year have destroyed P508 million worth of crops and adversely affected some 300,000 families.

ONLY A MONTH AGO, President Arroyo and Brig. Gen. Danilo Lim, head of the elite Scout Rangers Regiment, were on talking terms during her visit in Laur, Nueva Ecija.

The President appeared on television to announce Proclamation No. 1017 after a long night during which an aide said she went without sleep so she could talk with her close inditary and civilian advisers and preside over an emergency Cabinet meeting at 2

Neither Ms Arroyo nor her advisers gave any proof to back her contention that the political opposition, "military adventurists" and communist rebels were working together to unseat her.

Presidential Chief of Staff Michael Defensor said arrest orders had been issued against "eight to 10 individuals, including military officials, politicians and civilian financiers."

In hiding

Be said they were believed to have all gone into hiding.

"There is evidence that (former Presie dent Joseph) Estrada is part of the coup prot," Defensor said.

He said that Estrada had been in contact with Brig. Gen. Danilo Lim, head of the elite Scout Rangers regiment who had been placed in custody for allegedly enticing soldiers to withdraw support from Ms Arroyo

"We will offer that at the proper time," Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez said when asked what proof Malacañang had to back Ms Arroyo's allegation of an unholy alliance among her political opponents, soldiers and the communist New People's Army.

Calibrated action

"This is no time for proving," Gonzalez added "Go to the Supreme Court. Question this and we will offer the proof."

"What am I to prove to you? You are not the court," he said in reply to an IN-

Gonzalez did not rule out warrantless arrests under a state of national emergency since this could be done even without such a proclamation.

But he said the Palace would "calibrate" its actions.

"It can't be that we will arrest and just arrest," he said

Gonzalez told the INQUIRER that the state of emergency was just "standby power that the President can make use of when the necessity arises."

Plot thwarted

"It's just a notice to the whole world that I have this power and I will use it if necessary," he said

Taking over a facility "will depend on the need on public interest," he said.

Gonzalez said under the emergency, the President has "additional powers if she will exercise them " In her address to the nation, Ms Arroyo at one point said the plot had been thwarted but indicated later that the supposed consparacy could still be active.

Warning to plotters

Some had tried to break out of the Armed Forces chain of command , and establish a regime outside of the Constitution. We have broken up this plot," she said in Filipino.

But she also said "This is my warning to those plotting against the people. For your treachery, the full force of the law will fall on you."

Ms Arroyo signed the proclamation after meeting with the National Security Council attended by top Cabinet and military officials in Malacanang.

The President cited Section 18, Article 7 of the Constitution which empowers the President to "call out (the) Armed Forces to prevent or suppress rebellion..." and Section 17 Article 12 of the Charter authorizing her to "temporarily take over or direct the opera-

Orders and decrees

Ms Arroyo ordered the Armed Forces of the Philippines "to maintain law and will be no interviews that will be put order throughout the Philippines, prevent or suppress all forms of lawless violence as well as any act of insurrection or rebellion, and to enforce obedience to all the laws and to all decrees, orders and regulations promulgated by me personally or upon my direction."

Media warned

She said: "Over these past months, elements in the political opposition have conspired with authoritarians of the extreme Left represented by the NDP-CPP-NPA and the extreme Right, represented by military adventurists—the historical enemies of the democratic Philippine state—who are now in a ed to the 20th anniversary of Edsa "Peo-tactscal alliance and engaged in a concerted and systematic conspiracy over a broad front to bring down the duly constituted government elected in May

Saying these alleged conspirators had hart the Philippine economy, she turned on the media.

"The claims of these elements have been recklessly magnified by certain segments of the national media," she

In a briefing, Malacañang officials warned that newspapers, radio and television stations faced risks of being taken over by the government if they aired interviews of rebel soldiers and communist insurgents.(See related story on Page AI)

If, for example, anonymous callers, speaking on behalf of the other group, will be called by media without basis, then that would be enough basis for the government to intervene," Defensor

"Clearly, that is a probability based on the order," said Defensor, "This is an abnormal situation. Media has a critical role in this situation.

*[Closing down a media outfit] depends on how it (an interview) will be carried out. We hope at this point there out relating to the extreme Right and Left in the present situation," said De-

Palace guidelines

Press Secretary Ignacio Bunye said the government might come up with guidelines that would lay down the rules on how media should treat interviews with communists and adventurust soldiers.

We respect the freedom of the press but we expect this freedom to be exercised more responsibly," Bunye said

Malacañang later announced cancellation of all programs and activities relatple Power I" revolt.

No crackdown yet

Gonzalez explained that what was being cancelled were political railies "which are actually there for purposes of destabil zation."

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita issued General Order No 5 to implement Proclamation No. 1017

"In gist, it directs the Armed Forces of the Philippines in the face of the national emergency, to maintain public peace, order and safety and to prevent and suppress lawless violence," Bunye said

Talking later with Department of Justice reporters, Gonzalez said there were no existing plans to arrest media persons and take over media agencies critical of the Arroyo administration even if the "national media" had been cited in the proclamation as among those helping fan destabilization.

"Wala (None) That's not in the works," he said.

Honasan, Montayre

Gonzalez also revealed that they were contemplating on arresting former Sen-Gregorio Honasan, former civil society leader Linda Montayre, pro-Erap militant leader Ronald Lumbao and businessmen financing destabilization moves against the government

Gonzalez denied there were any immediate plans to take over key industries.

Open-ended

We have to calibrate our actions there. We have to take into consideration its effect on the economy itself. This is no kamikaze (law)," he said

Asked how long Proclamation No 1017 will last, Gonzalez repned "This is open-ended ... depending on the judgment call of the President But we have to take into consideration the public interest, until situation so requires."

Philippine Stock Exchange president Francis Lim expressed hope for a quick and peaceful resolution to the political situation for the sake of the stock market and the country.

Ms Arroya imposed emergency rule which allows arrests without warrants and an extension of detention without charge.

"With the imposition of the state of emergency in the Philippines, not only will foreign investor sentiment take a hit, at least for the near term, but most of the other factors that were supporting the peso could also fade temporarily," Swiss bank UBS said in a report.

Cardinal's concern

Senior Roman Catholic church leaders expressed concern over the President's declaration of a state of emergency.

"It doesn't look good if our government declares a state of emergency," said Manila Archbishop Gaudencio Rosales, who was promoted to cardinal by the Vancan this week.

"This could be a big provocation from among the contending parties to use violence," he said in a statement. Lipa Archbishop Ramon Arguelles said he hoped the state of emergency would not last long and there would be no violations of human rights.

Crossing party lines, senators yesterday slammed Ms Arroyo's declaration of a state of emergency.

"Now is the time for all peace-loving or suppress lawless violence," Santiago citizens to end Gioria's running amuck with our democratic values," Senate Mr nonty Leader Aquilino Pimentel Jr. said. "There's absolutely no basis except her lust for power," he said.

'Grave doubts'

"This is a sad day for democracy," Sen. Jamby Madrigal said.

Sen. Jinggoy Estrada and his mother Sen, Lausa "Loi" Bjercito warned that the declaration could be a prelude to a "pseudo-dictatorship."

Pangilman, and Senators Manuel Roxas II and Pra Cayetano also expressed alarm over the proclamation.

"We have grave doubts about the factual basis for the actions provided by Proclamation No. 1017. We therefore demand its revocation," they said in a joint But Seriate President Franklin Drilon

The House minority believed that Ms Arroyo in effect placed the entire country under martial law when she declared a state of national emergency.

Lawyers question, Gonzalez cites legal basis for 1017

By Armand N. Nocum

THE INTEGRATED BAR OF THE Philippines will question before the Supreme Court the legality of Proclamation No. 1017 even as the justice department justified its issuance as a move to "preempt hostile forces" out to topple the government.

In a telephone interview, IBP president Anselmo Cadiz said his group would question the constitutionality of the proclamation before the high court, saying that it was Congress that has the authority to declare a state of emergency. The President cannot just declare a state of emergency, Congress should do it," Cadiz said.

He said that as commander in chief, the President should have only used the "Articles of War" provision to deal with the rebelhous soldiers, if that was the basis of assuing Proclamation 1017

Worse than Marcos

"She is worse than Marcos because Marcos, when he declared martial law, had it ratified by the Supreme Court," Cadiz said.

lez said, however, that the Supreme Court cannot review the

"I don't think the Supreme Court will meddle in that ... It appears to me that this particular provision refers solely to the power of the President to declare [a state of emergency]," he said in a telephone interview.

He said the basis for Proclamation 1017 was Article 12 of the Constitution, which states that: In times of national emergency, when the public interest so re-What's it? 'No coup, power grab'

Justice Secretary Raul Gonza- quires, the state may, during the emergency and under reasonable terms prescribed by it, temporarily take over or direct the operation of any privately owned public utility or business affected with public interest."

Gonzalez said a state of national emergency was different from martial law where the Consuttstion gives the Congress and the Supreme Court powers of review.

Vicente Mendoza, a retired Supreme Court associate justice, yesterday warned that the proclamation could create a situation of warrantless arrests, which the courts may not be able to check.

"There is only one important legal constitutional issue that to my mind is important in declaring a state of national emergency: Did the President suspend the writ of habeas corpus or declare martial law?" he said.

According to Mendoza, the President has two powers: to suspend the writ of habeas corpus and declare martia, law.

That she did not go to the next step of either suspending the writ or declaring martial law was what was causing confusion, he said.

Lawyer Frank Chavez denounced Proclamation No. 1017 as unconstitutional and a sign of "creeping military rule."

To declare a state of emergency, the President should be authorized by a law enacted by Congress and that law should recognize the existence of a national emergency and specify the duration of her exercise, of her powers, Chavez said. Gonzalez said the state of national emergency was declared because of a coup plot hatched by military and police officials which was uncovered late Thursday.

Inside story: Senga ...

And before daybreak yesterday, Senga announced in a television interview that he had placed Lim under his custody. Senga's move followed reports that the one-star general had planned to break out of the chain of command

Two other Inquires sources, including a senior officer, said that Senga was "initially open" to the idea of a military withdrawal of support for Arroyo but changed his mind after talking to Army duef Lt. Gen. Hermogenes Esperon.

Asked by a reporter if it was true that he initially was open to such a rebel plan, Senga said: "That's not true."

Marines Col. Arrel Querubin was also present in the meeting between Senga and Lim, according to the sources, who were privy to the meeting.

The sources said that after the meeting, Esperon went to see Querubin at the Marine headquarters in Port Bonifacio and saw Marines "in formation" and apparently ready to move out.

Tension rose after Esperon ordered Army soldiers to surround the Marines but the standoff was resolved without a single shot being fired, the sources said. The standoff occurred at 3 a m. yesterday.

Rebel by heart

Why Lim, promoted to brigadier general only last April, was bold enough to withdraw support from Ms Arroyo didn't come as a surprise to both Senga and soldiers "supportive" of the opposition cause.

"General Lim is a rebel at heart," according to one of his friends who was with him during the early days of the Reform the Armed Forces Movement in 1986, which paved the way for the ouster of the late Ferdinand Marcos in February 1986.

Senga had also been "receptive" to suggestions from the opposition and from retired generals for a dialogue, said former Defense Secretary Fortunato Abat.

The anti-Arroyo forces awaiting results of the Senga-Lim meeting Thursday night included a former Army general, three ex-Constabulary generals, a former congressman, an ex-provincial governor, a resigned government lawyer and a "jueteng" whistle-blower, according to lik-QUIRER informants involved with the group

No bloodshed

These people find Lim a respectable sordier, even if some of them have called him a Johnny-come-lately in the movement, according to former Ambassador Roy Señeres.

Lim first met with the anti-Arroyo entics late in July at the peak of the "Hello Garci" controversy involving alleged rigging of the 2004 presidential election results.

He was reportedly sympathetic to their cause, but refused to lead any move to oust Ms Arroyo.

But like the retired generals, Lum didn't want to have Ms Arroyo removed by a bloody military uprising, Señeres said.

Lim reportedly told the group that at 50, he was the youngest of the current crop of generals and he might not be the best person to convince Senga and the service commanders to turn their backs on Ms Arroyo.

He instead mentioned retired Col. Voltaire Gazmin, head of the Presidential Security

Group under former President Corazon Agumo, according to the Inquirer sources.

Seneres later arranged a secret meeting between Lim and Gazmin. While they knew each other, Lim and Gazmin had avoided seeing each other. Lim was one of the perceived leaders of the December 1989 failed putsch against Aquino.

Gringo, Gazmin

Like former Sen. and ex-Army Col. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan, who was once detailed in Fort Magsaysay, Lim and Gazmin are well regarded by the members of the 7th Infantry Battahon in Nueva Ecija Gazmin was one of the unit's commanders during the Marcos administration.

The two officers kept quiet after Aguino reiterated that she would not support any coup against Ms Arroyo.

Still, the retired Constabulary generals kept on meeting with Lim, emphasizing it was within the framework of the Constitution for soldiers to withdraw support from the President because they owed their allegiance not to her but to the people

"General Lan may not be as brilliant as (Commodore) Rex Robles, but he is very intelligent, having graduated with flying colors from the West Point," said Robles's wife, Marilyn.

Survey favorite

Soon, other opposition leaders expressed interest in meeting Lim.

in September, Lim, along with Señeres, former Executive Secretary Oscar Orbos and Jesuit lawyer Fr. Joaquin Bernas, among others, emerged in a survey among jumor officers and foot soldiers as a top favorite to lead a movement against Ms Arroyo.

In October, Lim reportedly agreed to support the anti-Arroyo forces, provided that these forces take to the streets first before they abandon their command, The Constabulary generals welcomed Lim's statement, but communed to persuade him to take a more active role.

Another Incurrer source said that during the conversation with Senga, Lim declared his plan to "lead a group of soldiers in a march with the people in Edsa where he also intended to withdraw his support from the Arroyo administration."

But later in the conversation, Senga talked to Esperon who convinced Senga to remain loyal to Ms Arroyo and take custody of Lim and Querubin, according to the source

For blurting out his plans, Lim was relieved of his post as chief of the Scout Ranger Regiment Querubin, commander of a Marine brigade based in Lanao del Sur, opted to report to the Marine headquarters in Fort Bonsfacto Senga yesterday cleared Lim and Querubia of involvement in a military attempt to unseat "There is no coup," Senga said. "But there is an attempt by some soldiers to join the people in the protest railies," he said. Lim and Querubin were involved in the attempt by the Young Officers' Union (YOU) to unsear President Aquino in 1989 Querubin, a 1979 graduate of the Philippine Military Academy and Medal of Valor swardee, said he had not been relieved or placed under arrest.

Brig. Gen. Danilo Lim, a founder of the defunct Young Officers Union (YOU), was relieved as commander of the Army 1st Scout Ranger Regiment late Thursday night after meeting with Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Generoso Senga

At dawn, top AFP officials were on TV claiming that with the arrest of Lim, they had thwarted a defection.

Even so, Ms Arroyo declared a state of emergency before noon. An hour later, top defense and military offictals were hard put to justify the dec-

"I'd just like to state that the [AFP] was able to preempt some illegal actions by some officers, and the situation now is under control," said Defense Secretary Aveluno Cruz.

It was Cruz's first time to sit down with the AFP chief of staff and the chiefs of the Army, Navy and Air Force un a news conference

There were some attempts to commit illegal actions, [which] we prevented through dialogue with those concerned. The [AFP] leadership and the unit commands down the line are in full control," Senga said.

Not organized group

Earlier in the day, Senga was emphatic in denying a coup attempt

"This is not a coup [d'etat] or a power grab," he stressed as he announced Lim's arrest shortly before 6 a.m. "It was an attempt, a reported plan by some misguided elements in the AFP, to join protest actions and withdraw support from the President." But minutes earlier, Army chief Lt. Gen. Hermogenes Esperon said they Contradictory statements

But earlier in the day, Senga said Col. Anel Querubin, commander of the 1st Marine Brigade based in Marawi City, was also under investigation in connection with the supposed defection plan.

A military spokesperson even saxl Querabin had been likewise relieved, along with Lim and Chief Supt. Marcelino Franco of the Philippine National Police's Special Action Force. But the military took back its statement about Querubin's relief after the Marine Corps protested that he was not involved in the alleged withdraw-

a) of support Querubin had also once been part of the YOU that mounted the 1989 coup attempt against then President Corazon Aquino.

Lim was promoted to star rank last year, making him, at 50 years of age, the youngest general in the service.

Querubin, a Medal of Valor awardee, was given command of the 1st Marine Brigade last year, replacing Brig. Gen. Francisco Gudani, who has retired, and who is under courtmartial for testifying on supposed election irregularines.

Both Senga and Esperon said they had no reason to suspect Lim's loyalty

Senga said the President would not have promoted Lim or given him command of the 1st Scout Rangers Regiment if she had doubted his loyalty. Senga admitted that Lim did directly tell him about the planned withdrawal of support. He said he learned about Lim's intention from "other reports coming from different sources."

Preemptive measure

"After the session, we parted ways and we learned that he was pushing through with his planned action," Senga said.

'Give details' Senga expressed the belief that the supposed threat had been neutralized. Asked why the President still needed to declare a state of emergency, Cruz said the emergency powers were a preemptive measure.

Rex Robles, a plotter of several coup attempts against President Aquino, urged Ms Arroyo to disclose the details of the current supposed plot lest she be suspected of using the perceived military crisis for her own benefit, and to quash the scheduled rallies to mark the 20th anniversary of Edsa L.

Robles, a retired commodore and one of the members of the Reform the Armed Porces Movement, said that, while all announcements on the alleged plot were coming from the government, there seemed to be a dearth of specifics.

in a talk yesterday with reporters, in the Marine headquarters in Fort Bonifacio, Colonei Querubin denied being part of the supposed coup plot.

Looking sullen and dazed, Ouerubin said: "I did not go into hiding. I was always here at headquarters. I did not withdraw support. We are always for the chain of command. Even our troops in Marawi, I have been telling them for a long time to follow the chain of command."

He also said he was not under arrest or under the custody of the Marines: "I am free to move around."

Denials

Querubin, a 1979 graduate of the Philippine Military Academy, confirmed that Senga called him and Lim to Camp Aguinaldo at around 8 Thursday night

He said they were called on the basis of reports that they were to withdraw their support for the administration and join yesterday's rallies on Edsa

We explained that we are with the chain of command," he said

He denied earlier reports that he and Lim had tried to convince Senga to likewise withdraw support from the government. But Maj Bartosome Bacarro, Army spokesperson, said Querubin and Lim did ask Senga to withdraw support In response, Bacarro said, Senga riod Feb. 20-28: "My wife told me, 'Let's have a [Valentine] date.' But we are on red alert."

Explaining why he relieved Franco as chief of the combat-seasoned Special Action Force and named Chief Supt. Silverio Alarcio Jr. as replacement, PNP Director General Arturo Lomibao said: "There are persistent reports of recruitment in [Franco's] unit, and I'd like to investigate him and to validate this report."

Senga said that apart from Lim, no 1017: Veiled warning to certain media?

sponse to the disturbing situation.

Her response is based on two constitutional provisions: Article VII, Section 18 and Article XII, Section 17.

Article VII, Section 18 enumerates the three specific commander in chief powers of the President-martial law power, power to suspend the priviiege of the writ of habeas corpus, and the power to call on the Armed Forces to prevent or suppress "lawless vioience, invasion or rebellion." She specifically focuses on her power to call on the Armed Porces to "suppress rebellion." I take this to mean that, in her view, rebellion is afoot.

The scope of the power of the President to call on the Armed Porces under Section 18 has been dealt with by the court in earlier cases. The Supreme Court will not easily contradict the President's action because "the factual necessity of calling out the Armed Forces is not easily quantifiable and cannot be objectively established since matters considered for satisfying the same is a combination of several factors which are not always accessible to the courts in many instances, the evidence upon which the President might decide that there is a need to call out the Armed Porces may be of a nature not constituting technical proof. On the other hand, the President as commander in chief has a vast intelli-some of which may be classified as highly confidential or affecting the security of the state."

It would therefore be pointless to challenge the propriety of her call on the Armed Forces. What can be challenged are actions taken by her either personally or through the Armed Forces. However, in situations of great disturbance, challenges to governmental action are rarely resolved during the period of disturbances.

'Continuing crime'

What of warrantless arrests? Warrantless arrests of persons caught in flagrante delicto or "caught in the act" are constitutionally allowed. Moreover, rebellion, which the President has significantly cited as a foundation for her acnon, is considered in jurisprudence a "continuing crime;" that is, one who is involved in rebellion is deemed to be always actually commutting rebellion even when asleep and hence may be roused out of bed without a warrant.

What of railies and demonstrations? The Constitution recognizes the authority of the state to prohibit rallses and demonstrations which present a clear and present substantive danger to public peace. But again the challenge to a ban on rallies is rarely resolved at a time when resolution is needed. The wrong it righted late.

Disturbing

gence network to gather information, I find this disturbing for two reasons.

Section 12 says: "In times of national emergency, when the public interest so requires, the State may, during the emergency and under reasonable terms prescribed by it, temporarily take over or direct the operation of any privately owned public utility or; business affected with public interest. This provision is a child of martial law. It is not clear who is empowered to exercise it-the President or Congress? It first entered the Constitution after President Marcos declared marcal law. In other words, he could exercise it because he had martial law powers then and could exercise legislative power, President Arroyo has not declared martial law. She only has executive power and not legislative power.

The second reason for my finding this disturbing is that Section 17 embodies the power to "temporarily take over or direct the operation of any privately owned public utility or business affected with public interest." But she omits this clause in her proclamation. Rather, she only uses Section 17 to claim the power to declare a national state of emergency. Does this truncated use of Section 17 tell us that her real intention is to announce the existence of national emergency and thereafter surprise public utilities with a takeover? Is this a veiled warning to "certain segments of the national media" that she has the power to take them over? As I write this piece, things are still very fluid. As they usually say, Altergen!

ARMY TROOPERS UNDER MAJ. GEN. JOVITO Palparan helped prevent Scout Rangers under suspected renegade Brig. Gen. Danilo Lim from leaving Camp Tecson in San Miguel, Bulacan,

"My men have surrounded them," Palparan, commander of the Army's 7th Infantry Division, told the INQUIRER on Friday.

Aside from Camp Tecson, he said, his division also had the upper hand over Scout Rangers stationed at the division's Fort Magsaysay in Nueva Ecija.

"I have talked to them and there is no threat from them," he said. For his part, Lt. Gen. Romeo Tolentino, head of the military's Northern Luzon Command, said that aside from controlling the movements of Lim's men, the Notcom also arrested two Army officers who were recruiting for the Magdalo mutineers.

Tolentino said the two soldiers, whom he declined to identify, were arrested on Wednesday and turned over to the Philippine Army's national headquarters.

Tolentino said he deployed several tanks to Camp Aguinaldo on Friday morning after intelligence reports confirmed that Lim, commander of the 1st Scout Ranger Regiment, was moving his troops to join a raily at the Edsa Shrine.

Tolentino said Lim chose to join the rally on a "personal decision."

He said Maj. Gen. Benito Ramos, chief of the Scout Rangers, has sworn in Col. Reynaldo Mapagu as Lim's replacement. Tolentino said the situation was "not that serious."

He said it was "normal" for Nolcom to be on red alert every time there were "activities at the national level," such as those related to the 20th anniversary celebration of the Edsa I Revolt.

Tolentino said more than 10,000 troops beionging to Nolcom's 5th and 7th Infantry Divisions based in Isabela and Nueva Ecija, respectively, were intact and not making any orized movements.

On Priday, the council of commanders of nine Philippine Air Force units based in Clark and Basa Air Base in Floridablanca, Pampanga, held an early morning meeting

Maj. Gen. Fernando Manalo, council head, said their troops were "intact" and "remained under the chain of command."

Troops based in Clark and Basa Air Base comprise 70 percent of the PAF's strength, Manalo said.

He said two OV 10 attack helicopters remained parked at the Haribon complex of the Diosdado Macapagal International Airport and could fly out only on his or on orders of PAF chief Lt Gen. Jose Reyes.

Soldiers and policemen maintained checkpoints in the region's main thoroughfares, especially the North Luzon Expressway and the MacArthur Highway. The police in Camp Oilvas went on full alert on Thursday.

Danilo Francia, chair of the Clark Internanonal Amport Corp., said DMIA security measures were augmented.

He added that important facilities like the airport tower, terminal and navigational aids were secured on Friday and that PAF troops and the police were on standby to lend additional security in case of "escalated threat."

Papal nuncio bids RP goodbye

OUTGOING PAPAL NUNCIO ANTONIO Franco yesterday bid the Philippines farewell in a thanksgiving Mass at the Manila Cathedral held in his honor, but promised to keep the country in his prayers.

In his remarks after the Mass, the nuncio thanked the Catholic Church leaders, saying his memories of the Philippines would remain in his heart.

"In every church and every diocese, you have made the utmost to make the representative of the Holy Father feel the vitality of the local church, and the enthusiasm of the local church," Franco said. "Be sure that I will give you my prayers every day."

Franco, who was sent by the Vatican to the country in 1999, is expected to be assigned to Israel and Cyprus next month.

His successor has not been named,

In his homily, Manila Archbishop Gaudencio Cardinal Rosales asked the dnuncio to pray for the country.

the same march on Edsa, and she (Ms Arroyo) was at the Edsa Shrine, waiting for us to give her the presidency. And now she's stopping us," said University of the Phinppines professor and INQUERen columnist Randy David shortly before he was arrested by policemen in plainclothes.

David, along with Akbayan president Ronald Llamas and lawyer Argee Guevarra, was taken in a green Toyota Corolla sedan (plate number WJU-141) to Camp Kanngal, according to Akbayan media officer Percy Sendaña.

The three were charged with illegal assembly and inciting to sedition, but were released early last night.

In Makati City at 7-30 last night, a phalanx of antiriot police took demonstrators by surprise and succeeded in pushing them away from the Intersection of Ayala Avenue and Paseo de Roxas, where former President Corazon Aquino had earlier addressed them.

Shocked

The violent dispersal of the daytime mass actions shocked Aquino, who was catapulted to the presidency by the Pebruary 1986 People Power uprising that toppled Ferdinand Marcos' dicta-

"This is really shocking," The Associated Press quoted Aquino as saying. "It's ready a pity to lose our democracy again." in an ambush interview after her speech, Aquino, now 73, called on the people to continue to press for Ms Arroyo's resignation.

She said the threat of arrest would not stop her, adding that she went through a lot during the Marcos dictatorship.

"I have faced more dangerous situations a long time ago," she said. "We cannot just stay silent because that is what happened during martial law."

Aguino said the President was spoiling the spirit of the Edsa celebration by declaring a state of emergency.

Asked whether she believed that Ms Arroyo was worse than Marcos, she said. "You be the judge," But she urged the people not to allow things to culminate in martial law.

Aguino also said she was prepared to face the consequence of her act and incur the anger of Ms Arroyo.

She appealed to the military and police to heed their conscience and do what they think would be good for the people.

In an interview shortly before his arrest, David said Congress, and not Ms Arroyo, had the power to declare a state of emergency.

He said he did not recognize Ms Arroyo as President, but only as a politician who "stole the election and fooled the people."

Confetti rained down from time to time from the office buildings on Ayala, a show of support for which the activists expressed gratitude over their loudspeakers.

While they were initially barricaded by a line of antiriot policemen with truncheous and shields, the group was finally allowed to push to the Ayala Paseo intersection at 5:25 p.m.

At that time, police Director Vidal Querol was still on "wait-and-see"

At the Edsa Shrine, about 3,000 demonstrators carried red banners demanding the President's ouster.

Roof over Moscow market collapses, killing 57

MOSCOW-RESCUERS, PAUSING frequently to put their ears to the rubble to listen for signs of life, pulled scores of corpses out of a mass of concrete planks and metal beams after the snow-laden roof of a Moscow market collapsed.

At least 57 people were killed and 32 injured in the early Thursday morning collapse, Emergency Situations Ministry spokesperson Irina Andriyanova said Friday.

Virtually all the victims were believed to be workers from Azerbaijan and other former Soviet republics, among the thousands who have poured into the Russian capital to fill low-paying jobs such as those at the city's produce and housewares markets.

The probable cause was either the buildup of heavy snow, design flaws or maintenance errors, Moscow Prosecutor Anatoly Zuyev said. Prosecutors have opened a criminal investigation on charges of negligence leading to deaths, the RIA-Novosti news agency reported.

One of the survivors, Ukhtai Salmanov, a 52-year-old herbseller from Azerbaijan, said he left the market just before the roof gave way around 5 a.m.

"I heard a loud noise and I feil to the ground and lost consciousness. When I came to, I was lying by the entrance," Salmanov said.

Dubai firm to delay US ports takeover

WASHINGTON—A UNITED ARAB Emirates company has offered to delay its takeover of most operations at six US ports to give the Bush administration more time to convince skeptical lawmakers the deal poses no security risks.

The surprise announcement Thursday relieves some pressure from a standoff between President George W. Bush and the Republicancontrolled Congress, which has threatened to block the deal because of concerns over the UAE's purported bes to terrorism. Immediate reaction on Capitol Hill was mixed.

Under the offer coordinated with the White House, Dubai Ports World said it will agree not to exercise control or influence the management over US ports pending further talks with the Bush administration, Congress and local port authorities. It did not indicate how long it will wait for these discussions to take place.

The Dubal-based state-owned company said it will move forward with other parts of the deal affecting the rest of the world.

"It is not only unreasonable but also impractical to suggest that the closing or this entire for transaction should be delayed," Duba: Ports said in a statement.

"The reaction in the United States has occurred in no other country in the world," the company's chief operating officer, Ted Bilkey, said in a statement. "We need to understand the concerns of the people in the US who are worned about this transaction and make sure that they are addressed to the benefit of all parties. Security is everybody's business."

FBI objected to Gitmo tactics raised repeated objections to aggressive interroganon tactics at the US war on terror" prison in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, including some they said were approved at high levels of the defense department, documents released Thursday show.

The documents—a series of internal FBI e-mails and memos—trace a dispute that arose as early as November 2002 over military interrogation netics at Guantanamo, also known as Gitmo, and resurfaced in 2004 in the wake of the Abu Ghraib scandal

FBI officials said they taised their objections with Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Miller, the commander of the Guantanamo task force, arguing that the aggressive tactics were ineffective and unreliable. In their e-mail, the FBI officials also noted the "uncer-· tain" legality of the tactics.

But Miller appeared "biased" in favor of the tactics used by interrogators of the Defense Intelligence Agency-Defense Humint Service, they said. The documents do not spell out what tactics the FBI objected to, and at least one FBI official emphasized in e-mail messages that he knew of no credible allegations of abuse at the military-nun detention center.

But the e-mails allude to controverstal interrogation practices that eather were witnessed by special agents at Guantanamo or contained in interrogation plans that they had seen.

About 500 detainees are currently held at the prison in a remote corner of a US navy base.

"Our Behavioral Assessment Unit (BAU) disagreed with the use of specific techniques in the case of (redacted) as they opined that the techniques would not be successful and they could produce unrefisble results," said an e-mail message May 4, 2004 from an unidentified official.

The recipient, whose name was blacked out, responded, "I can think of two specific examples (of abuse) You may want to talk to BAU about (reducted) and (reducted) in GTMO.*

In an e-mailed reply the following day, the unidentified official cautioned that there was a distinction between "alleganons of abuse and the use of techniques which fall outside of FBI/DOJ (Department of Justice) training and policy

"As it relates to (redacted) and (redacted) the techniques employed against them in the interrogation process were, based on numerous inquiries I made, in addition to my personal review of the DoD interrogation plans, approved by the Deputy Secretary of Defense."

The deputy defense secretary at the time was Paul Wolfowitz, now head of the World Bank.

Nigeria city burns its Muslim dead

ONITSHA, Nigeria—AT LEAST 80 people were killed when Christians turned on Muslims living among them in a southern Nigeria city, a rights group said Thursday, while in the north Christians turned to the army for refuge against reprisals.

The city's dead in Onusha, mamiy Muslims, were burned on bonfires of blazing tires. On a drive around the town center, reporters saw at least nine more corpses to add to 19 they had found on Wednesday scattered by the road.

"We counted 60 bodies on Tuesday and 20 on Wednesday and there could be more," said Emeka Umeh, head of the local chapter of the Lagos-based Civil Liberties Organization (CLO), adding

"most of the victims are Muslims."

"It was a great massacre that should be condemned by any rightthinking person," he told AFP "Even now, bodies can still be found on Upper Iweka road," which is home to the predominantly Christian Igbo people.

The police should not relax. What we have now is graveyard peace," Umeh added, saying the victims were slain "with machetes, knives, metal objects, clubs and in some instance, even guns."

Most ethnic igbos returned to work in bustling and traffic-choked markets, walking by the smoldering bodies without a second glance, having disposed of evidence of the massacre moved here."

as far as they could be bothered.

Far across Nigeria in Katsina, some 7,000 igbo people were holed up in military barracks and police stations for fear of vengeance by the mainly Muslim Hausa people of the north for the sectarian slaughter in the south.

"We are afraid we could be attacked by Mushin youths in the city (who are angry with the riots in Onitsha," Chinedu Okafor, a 34-year-old motor spare parts dealer, told an AFP reporter in an army barracks.

"We feel unsafe living in the town because our homes and businesses could be targets of reprisal attacks. Most Igbos living in the city have

Edsa betrayed

E CONDEMN, IN THE STRONGEST TERMS, THE latest plot by misguided members of the military. In the same breath, and in the very same terms, we also condemn President Macapagal-Arroyo's declaranon of a state of emergency. This is a needless, reckless response to what the Army chief has called a "pending coup." It reinforces public perception that the Arroyo administration is prepared to sacrifice EDITORIAL democratic principles on the altar of political survival

The risk the coup threat poses to the State is real; the detention of Brig Gen. Danilo Lim, until yesterday the commanding general of the Army's elite Scout Rangers, and the arrest of Police Director Marcelino Franco, until yesterday the chief of the elite Special Action Porce of the Philippine National Police, are troubling indicators of both the depth and reach of restiveness in the armed services.

But it is a risk that is well within the power of the government to contain. We can only conclude that the President's declaration of a state of national emergency (through Proclamation 1017, a number with chilling Marcosian overtones) is a grave overreaction.

Malacañang does not have to take our word for it. The President and her men can ask the members of the financial community, whose judgment they apparently value the most. Joseph Tan, a regional economist at Standard Chartered Bank, spoke for many when he said: "What the alleged coup failed to do, in terms of weakening the peso, the President managed to do with the declaration of a state of emergency."

In other words, the proclamation, which is based (among other premises) on the assumption that the threat against the State includes activities "adversely affecting the economy," is actually what drove the peso down yesterday.

We find another premise of the proclamation deeply disturbing that "the claims of these elements (referring to some members of the political opposition in alliance with Leftist 'authoritarians' and 'military adventurists') have been recklessly magnified by certain segments of the national media. This is an unusual clause, and could very well serve as a pretext for cracking down on news organizations that publish unflattering stories about the administration. The un-cool, un-collected Michael Defensor, the President's Chief of Staff, confirmed our worst suspicions when he spoke excitedly about what the proclamation has empowered the administration to do. Among these, he noted the government's power to take over public utilities, "even media facilities," should the need arise.

In the hands of an administration that has in fact all but blamed the media for airing opinions or positions contrary to those of Maiacañang, it is not difficult to imagine the state of national emergency being used to gag journalists -and thus restrain the public's right to know.

We condemn both the coup plot and the presidential proclamation as acts of violence against the body politic. The use of organized violence, no matter how targeted, can never be an acceptable option. At the same time, the declaration merely gives legal form to brute political reality: The true mandate of this administration, engulfed in a continuing crisis of legitumacy, lies in the armed services.

We condemn both the plot and the proclamation as assaults on democracy. A violent strike is fatally undemocratic; a public that thinks the President stole the elections cannot turn around and embrace the violence that negates the very idea of the vote. At the same time, the declaration pays lip service to democratic ideals, but in truth creates an opportunity to curtail the very liberties at the heart of our democracy.

Not least, we condemn both the plot and the proclamation as betrayals of the highest ideals of the Edsa revolution. The events that shook the nation and stunned the world exactly 20 years ago today started when a military faction broke away from the Marcos regime. But it was not the military that launched the Edsa revolution; this lesson has been lost, however, on those adventurists in the military who have lost patience with the democratic experiment.

At the same time, the declaration is deeply, maddeningly anti-Edsa. Yesterday, when it was still only a few hours old, it was used to justify the violent dispersal of a crowd that had gathered to mark the Edsa anniversary, and to arrest some of the demonstrators. Here, indisputably, is proof that the Arroyo administration has turned its back on Edsa.

Redeeming the promise of Edsa

THIS IS PROBABLY THE LAST ARTICLE I will be writing about Edsa 1. By this time next year, that historic event will have been vindicated at last by a remorseful nation or just casually remembered as an insignificant vignette in the annals of our race.

It began on Sept. 23 34 years ago, a Saturday when I met my morning class in Political Isagani A. Cruz Law Review at the UE College of Law, There was an unusual number of absences but we held recitations just the same as in other ordinary meetings. Afterwards, however, a student approached me to say that Marcos had declared martial law two days ago and had begun to enforce it. The whole country was now under his absolute rule, with the armed forces be-

On my way home, I saw soldiers already stanoned at various places but without intimidation or arrogance as yet. I learned later of the omens of the terrible things to come under the new regime. Congress had been abolished and padlocked. The media were all banned except for those under the despot's control. Many of his enemies had been arrested without warrant for indefinite detention. The Supreme Court was silenced and effectively conscript-

The populace was initially indignant but was eventually cowed and regimented. The few who resisted were arbitrarily picked up, many of them to be tortured and folled. The "zona" of the Japanese occupation was revived, and the checkpoints for monetary shakedowns were legalized in the name of national security. Human rights were abused without reason or limitation.

The conjugal dictatorship of Marcos and Imelda ruled the country as if there were no tomorrow. The Constitution was desecrated to make their power unlimited and secure. The rubber-stamp Batasang Pambansa meekly obeyed them and the Supreme Court "legitimized" their illegal acts. Relatives and friends enjoyed exceptional privileges without accountability or companction. The entertainment industry sang hosannas to the tyranny and was generously rewarded. The military strutted with its new-found power as the new masters of the land.

This oppression continued for more than 13 years until the nation finally glimpsed a light at the end of the tunnel. On Feb. 22, 1986, Juan Ponce Enrile, defense minister and high sheriff of marrial law, hurled his defiance at the dictatorship. From his office at Edsa, he called on the people to fight for the downfall of Marcos and his cohorts. He asked AFP vice chief of staff Fidel V Ramos to join him, and he did. Butz Aquino urged his followers to raily to them, and they did

They first came in trickles but soon grew to thousands, and hundreds of thousands, of Filipinos who had finally discovered their anger and their courage to summon it against the tyrant. Men and women from all walks of life, paupers and millionaires alike, teachers and their students, sweethearts arm-in-arm, a grandmother in a wheelchair and nuns carrying candles and bouquets, even teenagers reckless of the danger of bayonets and bombs-all of them joined in the towering demand for Marcos to step down. He finally did, on Feb. 25, 20 years ago today. As demonstrators marched on Malacanang to wreak vengeance on the man who had disgraced it, US planes flew Marcos with his family and co-principals to safety in Hawaii, where he was later to die, away from the land he had betrayed and unpunished for

What has Edsa accomplished besides the end of his dictatorship? Have its satraps been suitably penalized for the rank offenses they committed during the dark period of martial law? Has the wickedness of that unhappy time been erased with the revival of the people's freedom and the vindication of their outraged

To ask these questions is to accuse ourselves of our indifference to that evil era and our blasé condonation of its immunized transgres-

The people of Romania executed Nicolas and Elena Ceausescu, Mao Zedong's wife was upon his death imprisoned for her sins, and Augusto Pinochet is now, at age 91, being prosecuted for crimes he allegedly committed as president of Chile. But the scoundrels of our martial law have not suffered similar retribution for their ravishment of our helpless na-

Places are still named after Marcos and his wife. The cases against her are still aleeping in our courts, except one where her conviction was reversed by the Supreme Court and her P23.5-billion tax deficiency that is still not fully collected. Many of the couple's cronies are still in power and remain as untouched as before for their nonchalant misdeeds. The public funds they have malversed have not yet been returned to their rightful owners. The venalities we hoped Edsa would correct are still with us now as if that bloodless revolution had not happened at all.

In our celebration of Edsa today, let us resolve to give it its true meaning and purpose in 1986. Let us recall its significance in ending the Marcos oppression and the peaceful restoration of democracy to our tormented country. That glorious event earned us the admiration of the world, but we have forgotten that tribute, too, as if we did not deserve it.

Keeping the flame of Edsa alive

COUNT ME OUT OF THE PROTEST ACTIONS at the Edsa Shrine and Makati disguised as a peaceful celebration of the 20th anniversary of the Erisa People Power Revolt. It is not because I don't want to celebrate it-that event showed not only us, but an admiring world, the best of the Filipino spirit, and is therefore worthy of recall. But I refuse to celebrate it with people who are cynically using the occasion to further their own political or personal agendas by invoking "the greater good." Truly the last refuge

By doing so, they are destroying all that the Edsa revolt stands for: the spirit of self-sacrifice for the motherland, with no thought of personal benefit. And what is more, they are encouraging military adventurism that may end up at first with a military/civilian junta, but will, if world experience is any indication, surely metamorphose into a military dictatorship, a la Myanmar with its 44-year-old military rule. That will truly be the height of trony: they want to change Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo (with assertions of her "illegitimacy" that so far has not been substantiated), and will end up with a regime that they may not be able to change at all. Sow the wind, reap the whirlwind.

Those who are calling loudest for Ms Arroyo to make the "supreme sacrifice" and step down for the "good of the country," what kind of sacrifice are they willing to make, if at all? Take the leftists with the red flags who sat out Edsa i and are trying to exploit the event to set up their own government without benefit of elections (to be held only after 1,000 days, if at all). Like the proposed governing council or junta, were they not expecting to be in that self-same governing council themselves? Take those who resigned their Cabinet positions. Was that really a sacrifice, considering that they seemed to be maneuvering to be in the incoming government (what was that visit to Hong Kong all about, after all)? Or those who supported them. Weren't they also expecting, and bargaining for plum positions in the successor government? Or those supposed military "idealists" who want change. What were they doing playing footsies with the New People's Army, whose sworn objective is the violent overthrow of any government that is not theirs? Or people like Scout Ranger Brig. Gen. Danny Lim, who has been in I don't know how many coup attempts, pretended to have reformed and thus rose through the ranks, and now resurfaces as the head of a breakaway group. Have they bothered to ask themselves what benefit, or rather, damage, the country has incurred from their activities to supposed-

What about all the hysterical reactions to the so-called "state of emergency," which does not add any powers to the President that she does not already have? It is like the "state of rebellion" declared during -was it the Oakwood incident?-that some people immediately described as undeclared martial law. The fact is that there is an emergency situation because there was an attempt by a faction of the military to withdraw support from the government and to solicit participation through the chain of command. And it is likely that the attempt was made with the support, tacit or material, of others. And it is likely that a few (certainly not all) elements of those participating in the street celebration may want to exploit the situation for their own ends. Provided that the police act with maximum tolerance, what is wrong with taking the necessary precautions to make sure that the assemblies are indeed only peaceful celebrations of a glorious moment in our history?

After all, the spirit of Edsa is not dead, as some people say, perhaps to excuse their inability to mobilize a critical mass in the streets. It is very much alive--not in those with selfserving agenda or who think of it in the narrow sense of street protests-but in the quiet heroes engaged in the noble task of nationbuilding, especially in their own communities, who exercise people power as an instrument to make a better life for themselves. Like the parents who work with local officials to improve the education of their children (i.e., Synergea, about which I have often written), or who make sure that their local officials are accounable for the internal revenue allotments, or who strive to make the justice system work is their barangays, or who even resort to the recall of non-performing local officials, or who resist projects that endanger their environ-

There are other manifestations of people power at a broader level. Like the private ininative, Gawad Kalinga, that is so purely unselfish in spirit that it has drawn countless people to help build not only homes but thriving communities for the underprivileged Like government officials both low and high (Gem) Carague at the Commission on Audit, and Karina David at the Civil Service Commission) who are engaged in institution-building despite the distractions and politicking around

Or those who are disappointed with the impeachment proceedings but know that the ultimate sanction in the accountability process in a democracy lies in the elections. Hence, their objections to the No-RI scenario and their advocacy for truly credible elections in 2007. A Congress with a different composition can pursue the "closure" of the Issue of national lead-

There are thousands more like them around the country. This year I am celebrating Edsa with them, because of them, for keeping the flame of Edsa alive for all of us.

State defends itself

THE PORCES THAT CONVERGED ON EDSA YESterday against the Arroyo administration drew alements from the extreme Left to the extreme Right and opposition politicians, principally from the camp of Joseph Estrada The main group converged around the Edsa Shrine, which was offlimits to any rally. Later in the day, with the proclamation of a state of emergency and the prohibition of railies of all kinds, the gatherings could be a flash point as the destabilizing groups sought to ride on the Edsa celebration. Red flags dominated Metro Manila's streets, though one group led by Dr. Minguita Padilla, Sen. Panfilo Lacson's doctor, came out to show support for Brig. Gen. Danilo Lim, chief of the AFP's Special Forces, who was detained by AFP Chief Gen. Generoso Senga yesterday on charges of rebeilion.

As I wrote this column yesterday, appeals were being made to former President Cory Aquino to answer the call of patriotism and keep her followers out of harm's way. Antique Gov. Salvacion Zaldıvar-Perez, chair of the Region 6 Development Council and a fanatical Ninoy-era marcher, asked Aquino "to please help preserve and protect our democracy, which we all fought for in Edsa." But Aquino pushed through with the march, surrounded mostly by Erap leaders. Matauhan sana si Cory na ginagamit lang siya ng mga Erap's followers, and the extreme Left and Right. In a clash between these two extremes, Aquino is bound to become irrelevant. In the meantime, the nation is rent apart. Is this what she wants?

It's interesting that this fresh coup attempt was led by familiar faces, such as Danny Lim and Marine Col. Ariel Querubin. A soldier who spoke on condition of anonymity alleged that former rebel leaders, such as Gregorio Honasan, Tito Legaspa and Jake Malajacan, are behind the coup plotters. All these have figured prominently since the first coup that ousted Marcos and those attempts during the Cory years. If they are indeed behind this new attempt, then it must be true that once a coup plotter, always a coup plotter.

Olivares-Cunanan put a handle on the situation doubtless were uppermost in their minds as GMA, her Cabinet and members of Congress debated what measures to take. What emerged as a clear option was the declaration of a national emergency. A Palace insider recalled that what guided the Cabinet toward that declaration was the fusion of forces of the opposition, the extreme Left as well as the extreme Right, such as the Oakwood mutineers, the Abat group and others. When GMA, dressed in a beige Chinesestyle suit, finally announced the declaration in Filipino, she was very somber and came across as forceful and in command of the situation.

The coup attempt and the subsequent declaration of national emergency caught most people by surprise. In the midst of it all, I managed to at tend the observance of the National Day of the Republic of Estonia, hosted by its honorary consul, Dr. Juan Peña. The guests congratulated one another for braving the Edsa troubles, and apprechared the lack of traffic.

The declaration caused most lawyers and even court judges and justices to rush to their copies of the Constitution and search for its basis. The initial reaction was that there was no basis, but Palace sources quickly pointed out Article 2 of Sec. 4 and Art. 12 of Sec. 17 Art. 2, Sec. 4 provides that "The prime duty of the government is to serve and protect the people," and in this case, it could be against clear and present danger to the State. Art. 12 of Sec. 17 reads, "In times of national emergency, when the public interest so requires, the State may, during the emergency and under reasonable terms prescribed by it, temporarily take over or direct the operation of any privately-owned public utility or business affected with public interest." Words like "temporary takeover" flew thick and fast

Palace sources drew a comparison to the state of emergency declared after the May 1, 2001 assault on Malacañang by Erap's sympathizers, but there are lawyers who argue that the two declarations are not quite the same. Some recalled that in Aug. 15, 2000, the Integrated Bar of the Philippines took then Executive Secretary Ronaldo Zamora, AFP Chief Angelo Reyes and PNP Chief Panfilo Lacson to court for ordering what the lawyers felt were lawless arrests. The government officials won that case and that victory is now cited as a precedent to yesterday's declara-

Yesterday, there was a feeling among some lawyers that the basis for the declaration of a state of emergency remained unclear. Within the next few days, expect lawyers to continue this debate in the light of the arrest of prominent leaders.

But all through this, various forces rallied behind GMA, notably her strongest base of support: the congressmen, governors, mayors and other local officials. Most significant was the early support of the Southern Command, the biggest in the AFE Predictably, many businessmen supported GMA's move as "stabilizing." Personally, I felt this move coming.

All these destabilization moves are extremely sad and so bad for us. I was in Antique two weeks ago for the 20th anniversary of Evelio Javier's martyrdom, and I noted that the province has become quite progressive, with big banks, shopping centers and other trappings that should take it out of the Club 20 poorest provinces. I was also in Isabela and Nueva Vizcaya recently and saw how they have progressed, with good infrastructure and progressive communities. We have improved our credit standing in the judgment of three important credit rating agencies, with two more agencies set to follow. Our budget deficit has shrunk as government revenues have risen. In other words, the economy is looking good. But our political situation remains unstable. Why does it have to be so?

And what kind of soldiers would not use their armaments to remove obstructions to their mission? A sane person would just go home and watch history unfold on television, away from possible violence. A brave soldier would use every means to accomplish his objective. In acting the way they did at Edsa, these people would appear to be "Insane" in the eyes of ordinary people,

Many people would now ask. What's the use of commemorating Edsa? We are still a nation in crisis. Politicians are still greedy for position, power and money. Where is the love and peace that reigned over Edsa in 1986? Have the people changed? Only their age and positions have changed, but not

Amid this discouraging situation, the Church continues to counsel us not to lose hope. We may get fed up with the unabated corruption we see in public offices and frustrated by the fact that some many corrupt officials can go about their evil ways with impunity. "IT'S LIKE DÉJÀ VU ALL OVER AGAIN "

Filipinos might have felt like quoting former New York Yankee player-manager Yogi Berra up-on catching sight of news footage yesterday morning. There on Edsa was a multitude, defying a declaration of a "state of emergency" and a ban on all street rathes The scene was reminiscent of the events of 20 years ago, when Filipinos by the hundreds of thousands defied a "curfew" imposed by a beleaguered Ferdinand Marcos and turned the highway into the center of all the protests that had erupted around the country. Unknown to the people gathered on Edsa, Feb. 24 would turn out to be the most tension filled and dangerous of the four days of that uprising. Several turning points would take place, including the defection of the 15th Strike Wing and the hesitance and eventual refusal of the loyalist troops in Camp Aguinaldo to fire the guns trained on the rebel troops in Camp Crame. By the next evening, the situation would resolve itself with the departure of the Marcoses from Malacañang Certainly, the events unfolding yesterday, indeed still taking place as of this writing, seem but a pale echo of the "Edsa Uno" scenario. But the situation is fluid. The rally on Ayala Avenue in Makari has yet to unfold, and the full details of the confrontation that took place early yesterday morning in Camp Agunnaldo, described, depending on one's source, as a "discussion," "coup attempt" or "withdrawal of support from the government" have yet to be revealed. At a noon press conference, APP Chief of Staff Gen. Generoso Senga would only say that Brig. Gen. Danilo Lim was in his custody, after Lim had declared his withdrawal of support from the Arroyo administration, apparently in full view and within hearing of the command chiefs.

THE IRONY is not lost on us. A President who assumed the office by virtue of a reprise of People Power in 2001 now desecrates the memory of the original by declaring a state of emergency in the middle of the four-day observance of Edsa's 20th anniversary. Much the same point was raised by UP pro-

THIS BEING THE BEGINNING OF ANOTHER year, it seemed to be the right time to clean out cobwebs, papers and contents of brown envelopes that were threatening to engulf the apartment. To be fair to people both in and out of government who have written to clarify some salient points discussed in past articles, this may also be a good time as any to publish their comments.

I know many of us are still wondering what happened to the proceeds from the sale of Fort Bonufacio, or specifically the P5.489 billion representing the 35 percent share of the Armed Forces of the Philippines for its Modernization Program. According to a letter from lawyer Framencio Lagustan, former President Fidel V Ramos' spokesperson, the money was remitted to the National Treasury and placed in a special account. Six years ago, on April 30, 1998, the AFP wrote the Office of the President that it was ready to manage the trust fund. On May 29, 2000, the Department of Budget and Management issued a Special Allounent Release Order to the AFP for P5.4 billion, indicating that at the end of Ramos' term, the funds were intact.

During the Estrade administration, the AFP Modernization Program was relegated to low priority. Budget Secretary Benjamin Diokno stated that the modernization program had to be postponed until the financial crisis was over. (Pardon me, but since we are forever in a stare of financial crisis, does this mean that the modernization program will never be carried out or that the funds from the sale of public domain will not be utilized for the purpose intended?) Perhaps Diokno should tell us whether the funds were still intact when Estrada was ousted. If they were, then we should get explanations from his successors, former Budget Secretaires Emilia Boncodin and Romulo Neri.

I tell you, one of my biggest resentments is the lack of accountability around here, starting with the Presidential Commission on Good Government that, as far as everyone knew, was co-terminus with the Aquino administration. PCGG offi-fessor Randy David in his interviews with news anchors presiding over the live coverage of yesterday's tumultuous events. David was being interviewed as a consequence of his arrest during the dispersal of a group of railiers massed at the corner of Edsa and Santolan, which earned a place in Edsa history as one of the fronts in the anticipated battle between the Marcos loyalist forces and the people. Yesterday, it had seemed the "battle" was joined again, with police violently driving away ordinary citizens exercising their right to peaceful assembly. Even as Cabinet officials and local government executives gathered in Malacanang assured the Filipino public and the world that the situation was "back to normal," police were busy creating chaos in the streets, enforcing the President's ban on all assemblies as part of her declaration of national emergency. What a way to celebrate the Spirit of Edsa!

THE PRESIDENT and her officials were hard put explaining the basis for the declaration of a state of national emergency, Legal eagles in the President's team sought to justify her orders -even likening the situation at one point to a catastroph ic natural disaster—but were hard put providing details on what exactly constituted a threat to the government.

Senga sought to downplay the significance of Lim's pronouncement, saying it came after a "discussion of issues." But if it was a mere "discussion," and lant's declaration just a bit of bravado or loose talk, would that mean the Republic was in peril? The military was quick to hoast that their ranks were intact and that their soldiers and weaponry observance of Edsa's 20th anniversary (since shelved, I suppose) was for the staging of a long unbroken line of people linking soms in the classic gesture of "kapit-bisig" all the way from the Ninoy statue along Roxas Boulevard ın Manila to Makati where another Ninoy statue stands, and thence to the Edsa Shrine. If it had pushed through, the "kapit-busig" would have been an awesome sight, a symbol of the Filipino people's continuing faith in freedom and democracy, of their willingness to put their lives on the line to defend thus democracy and freedom, and their determination to rally the nation and bring the struggle to greater heights. But yesterday, all attempts to "kapit-bisig," even metaphorically, were broken up and dispersed. Perhaps the Arroyo administration has indeed learned the "right" lessons from 20 years ago and even from five years ago. Don't allow the number of people on Edsa to reach a so-called "critical mass." Put down each and every attempt, however small, to draw a crowd and build a momentum for protest Intimidate the populace and scare the media into silence and indifference. Call the protesters "pasaway," or simply inclined to defy lawful

But the President, I fear, ignores the symbolic power of Edsa, and the powerful feelings this 20th anniversary evokes. The day of reckoning may not arrive, for all we know, today or tomorrow, but her panicked reaction to perceived threats seems only to hasten that day's arrival.

cials have since managed to perpetuate themselves in power and feed on the poor Filipino like the proverbial leeches. For the nth time, what happened to all those sequestered companies?

We have to laud presidential Adviser and UP professor Carolina Hernandez for the comprehensive report the sent explaining the specific recommendations of the Peliciano Commission. But there are still some issues that remain unclear. The United States has pledged $160 million (P9 billion) to finance the Philippine Defense Reform program, provided we put up an equivalent amount. Remember that special account in the National Treasury covering the funds from the Bonifacio sale? Have we used it as the counterpart fund, and if so, has the United States begun to release the pledged $160 million?

As the first civilian defense secretary under President Macapagal-Arroyo, Avelino Cruz promised to implement what he called the Philippine Defense Reform. What important reforms has he instituted? The ASP's ratio of non-combatants to field troops is 10 to 1) The world-wide standard is 2.3 to 1. If the numbers were trimmed to conform to world standards, the APP personnel budget could probably be reduced to P12 billion against the present P36 billion—for savings of P22 billion that could be used to Improve their equipment. Last we heard, the Philippine Air Force didn't even have enough planes for training and was still holding out tin cans walting for American munificence.

Another awful statistic is the ratio of pilots to planes. It appears that the PAF has a total of 1,018 pilots with ranks of lieutenant to lieutenant general. By Hernandez's count, the number of operational planes is 62. If the ideal ratio is 3 pilots to 1 aircraft, we would need 340 planes, a number we certainly cannot afford. Isn't the solution then to downsize PAF personnel since there aren't enough planes for them to fly?

PAF pilots collect extra income through their "flight pay," which is earned if a pilot flies a plane at least four hours a month. Since few operational aircraft are available, does it follow that many pilots don't earn flight pay?

Hernandez has done much to dismantle the "compareller cult" in the AFP Most people though were outraged that retired Maj. Gen. Carlos Garcia, who was found guilty of "high-level corruption," only received a two-year sentence at hard labor. Will Garcia be charged before the Sandiganbayan for criminal offenses which carries a heavier penalty or is the case being filed merely to recover hadden wealth? Will his wife then be charged as accomplice? And, just as important, was the wife of retired Gen. Angelo Reyes ever investigated for the frequent trips she took in the company of Mrs. Garcia? I had read that the Garcia bank accounts in the United States had been frozen. Do they remain so?

Col. Ricardo Morales, who advocated not just "reform" but "transformation" of the APP, has been sacked, according to the newspapers. Was he sacked because of his recommendations? And has he been mustered out of the APP or just relieved of his field post?

Let us hope that Hernandez remains as presidential adviser for as long as it takes to reform the AFP. We should congratulate her. Even the feedback from Poggy Bottom says that she's doing a commendable job. We wish there were more of

Leftist tag

THE KARAPATAN ALLIANCE FOR the Advancement of People's Rights lauds the inquite for giving attention and space to pressing issues confronting our nation, particularly those pertaming to human rights. We are thankful that human rights organizations like ours are given the chance to present our findings on cases involving human rights violations.

However, our attention has been drawn to certain news items referring to Karapatan as a leftist group/ieft-wing organization. (PDI, 12/3/05; 2/1/06) The tag seems to suggest that our human rights problems are that many as a result of our being a "leftist group." Unnecessarily, too, the tag reinforces the statements of military officials that we are a front organization of the Communist Party of the Philippines, a justification that the military all too often uses to summarily execute civilians, human rights workers included. We are being subjected to a vilification campaign, which not only puts our field workers at greater risk but also hinders us from giving immediate assistance to victims. To date, 22 Karapatan human rights workers have been killed under the Arroyo administration, six of them women. Karapatan is and will always be an umbrella organization of different human rights organizations, desits, institutions and individual advocates operating within the framework of law. As a citizen's watchdog on human rights, it is our duty to observe how the Philippine government, as a signatory to human rights conventions, complies with the highest standards set by human rights instruments. Reported cases of violations committed by state security forces against its cauzens are documented by our organization as we advocate for the respect of the full scope of the Filipino people's human rights.

US MARINES clear the debris left by a landslide which buried Barangay Guinsaugon in St. Bernard, Southern Leyte. 'What we have seen has been horrendous'

By Carla P. Gomez Bacolod City

NOMMANDER MANUEL "Don" Biadog, the Fil-J ipino-American chaplain of the United States 3rd Marine Expedition Force, has been in practically all situations with the troops.

As chaplain of the US Navy for 16 years, he had counseled those devastated in the 9/11 New York tragedy, traveled to help the poor in East Timor and provided spiritual guidance to soldiers in Iraq.

But in his work that has taken him to many countries around the world, never has the pain of the people been so close to home for him, Biadog said.

This time I am working among my people, my blood brothers and sisters. My heart goes to the families of those who perished. What we have seen here has been horrendous," he said in a tele-

Biadog said he stood in the midst of the mud-covered Barangay Guinsaugon, St. Bernard town in Southern Leyte province on Feb. 22 and prayed Corps helping in the rescue efforts in tragedy "horrendous" is the fact that that if there were people still alive beneath where he stood, they would not give up hope until rescuers got to them.

The chances of finding people alive is getting slimmer as the days go by but we cannot and do not want to lose hope," said Biadog, 49, who was born in Talisay City, Negros Occidental.

Buadog was 23 when he left Negros Occidental for the United States 26 years ago, in 1979, to study to be a Protestant pastor on a scholarship in Southeastern College in Mississippi. He joined the US Navy in 1990, Biadog's mother, Emilıana, now lives in San Diego, California. His father, Manuel Sr., has since died.

On Feb. 22, Biadog also had another first: He met a president of the Philippines when Gloria Macapagal Arroyo visited ground zero in Guinsaugon.

"I have met two US presidents—Bill Clinton and George Bush-but never a Philippine president," he said. "My general took me to meet her and I told her I condoled with the Filipuno people and she said Thank you, thank you for your help."

He also met and spoke with former First Lady Imelda Marcos who visited Guinsaugon on the same day Ms Arroyo came. Another Filipmo in the US Marine Guinsaugon is Staff Sgt. Trini Yabut, 34, of Bacolod City. Yabat, who joined the US Marines in 1990, is a member of the battalion landing team Yabut, in a separate phone interview, said there were about 10 Fil-Ams among the US forces in St. Bernard.

"I am proud of what I do. I am glad to be of help to my kababayan (countrymen). It is a great opportunity to come over and be of help," he said.

The situation here is indescribable. I thought I was only being sent to help in a small landslide but what we found here was a massive tragedy," be added. Biadog distributed packages to the survivors of the landshide that contained food, tolletnes and slippers. He said he has been helping in the rescue efforts, finding more aid to help the people and providing counseling to the rescuers. Biadog was among the first 15 US Marines who arrived in Guinsaugon on Saturday, a day after the landslide.

He said he was chosen to join the US ream because he speaks flonggo and Cebuano, and can serve as an interpreter.

There were 500 US sold,ers helping in the search on land while the rest ! were on a ship, he said.

The US troops work in shifts: "They ! work two days and are relieved by others while they rest on the ship, he said.

"Even if we find just one person still alive, our efforts amid the heat, rain, humudity and the danger of another landslide would have been worth it," he said.

Biadog said a US emergency response team at the disaster site, composed of munisters of different denominations and-Catholic priests, were providing counseling to families of the victims as well as helping rescuers, health workers and representatives of nongovernment groups cope.

We have to help them cope with the fact that what they see here one day is what will bother them in their sleep, and they will remember the smells and hies orla

A history of geologic collapses in St. Bernard

By Rolando O. Borrinaga Tacloban City

■ HE LANDSLIDE-STRICKen town of St. Bernard in Southern Leyte was created on Dec. 9, 1954, by virtue of Executive Order No. 84 signed by then President Ramon Magsaysay.

It was gerrymandered from its mother town of Cabalian, and was centered at the former Barrio Himatayon, Cabalian's oldest and most progressive village located west of the town.

Alberto R. Lesiguez, editor of the weekly The Tacloban Star and native of Cabalian, said the splir from the mother town was engineered by a former Leyte governor who almost always lost his election barries to an opposing clan in the mother town.

A few years later, in June 1961, Cabalian itself changed its name to San Juan, citing negative connotations of its name, with the key word "bali," which in Bisayan means "to break or to cut."

Cabalian was the first large settlement in Leyte islands to be described in the chronicles of Conquistador Miguel Lopez de Legazpi in 1565.

From their southern Samar anchorage, a team led by Martin de Goin, riding on a small boat, searched for a settlement along the coast of the two main islands facing Leyte Gulf from where they could procure food for the hungry crew. They eventually came to the southern part of Leyte, to a sheltered bay, where they saw for the first time since their arrival a large village comprising of over 200 houses.

From the sea, the Spanish searchers saw scores of people engaged in some activities, while visible in the background were extensive rice fields. Near the shore were three large paraw being loaded with rice. Sacks and bundles of root crops piled on the beach.

The Spaniards concluded that the parew were owned by outsiders coming to buy provisions. The name of the place they discovered was Cabalian.

Houses on slopes

The search team hurried back to their ships anchored near Guiuan, Samar. The entire expedition arrived in Cabalian in the morning of March 6, 1565. A ship's pilot described this Leyte village in its pristine condition as follows:

HISTORIC accounts indicate that the Feb. 17 landslide in Guinsaugon, St. Bernard was a reprise of the one that happened 260 years ago.

"When we anchored within view of Cabalian, we saw a thickly planted grove of coconut trees and houses between the trees. A little farther inland, a steep cliff and on the slopes more houses, and beyond this again many big rice fields and plots of millet and similar crops were to be seen. A great commotion broke out as our ships came to anchor, big crowds congregating among the houses and palm trees, gazing at the slups and apparently afraid to approach the shore. Pigs, chickens, and dogs were to be seen roving around everywhere."

When some officials of San Juan sought this author's help last year in seeking historical data that would serve as basis for their town's foundation day, we found records which showed that Cabalian was officially separated from the town of Malithog on Sept. 15, 1860, and its parish was established four months later. And so, San Juan celebrated its first ever foundation day last Sept. 15, the old Cabalian's 145th anniversary.

This author coordinated the work on Cabalian history with Pablo Suarez, administrator of the San Juan Campus of Southern Leyte University (SLU)

One of the mysteries that Suarez and I have been trying to solve was the location of a missing landmark that was described in the Legazpi chronicles. This was a steep cliff a little farther inland on which slopes were found more bouses, and beyond which there were many large rice fields and plots of millet.

Volcanic eruption

The insight came after I met Lessguez at a press conference last Saturday. While discussing the St. Bernard landslides, he casually mentioned his hometown folklore about a volcanic emption in Cabahan in the 17th century.

Suddenly, I had a specific location for a volcanic eruption in Leyte in 1749, which was reported by the Augustanian friar Agustin Maria de Castro sometime in 1770. He said, "In the year forty-nine ! [i.e., 1749], the volcano [presumably Mt. 3 Cabalian, farther to the east of the town], exploded with fire from six mouths.

For two weeks the sun could not be seen by day, and the temblors lasted a whole year and continued later, resulting in pestilence, lightning and annoying rains of ash."

Before the above sentence, Father De Castro mentioned related disasters in 1 the preceding years.

He said, "In the years of forty-three? and forty-four [i.e., 1743-44], there were strong earthquakes that runed many towns and a mountain collapsed about a hundred fathoms (i.e., 600 feet)."

it is probable that the collapsed mountain that Father De Castro mentioned was " closer to Cabalian and was the same I steep cliff mendoned in the Legazpi chronicles, but is now inexistent.

Last Priday's collapse of an entire side of Mt. Can-abag in St. Bernard A seems to be Just a reprise of the total 1 collapse of a nearby mountain more than 260 years ago.

THE COUNTRY'S fight against pirated optical materials seems to have gained ground.

Last week, the office of the United States Trade Representative (USTR) downgraded the Philippines from its "priority watch list" to "watch list "

If true, this is simply prational. It has befuddled even people at the US Embassy. Manzano does well in lus work and now they want hun replaced?

WHY is it that most people in government think their position allows them to acquire ill-gotten wealth?

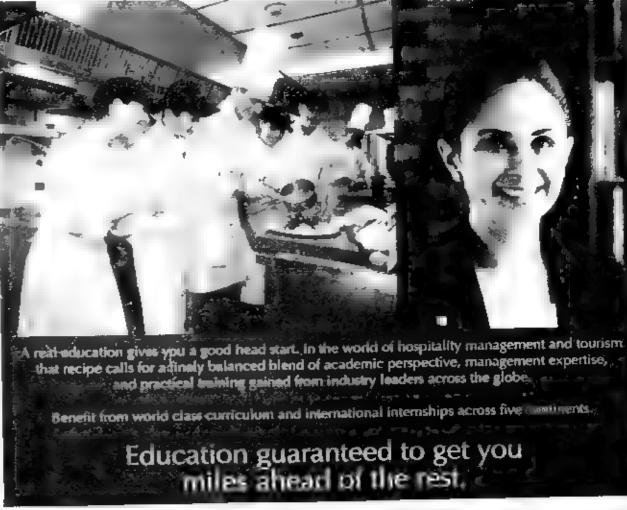

Take the case of a Cabinet member who was able to buy a unit in a very expensive condominium in Pasig City a few months after he was given a sinecure in a sequescered firm.

Before he came to Manda, this guy was so poor he couldn't even afford to buy cigarettes; he mooched from others. Now, he chain-smokes an imported brand.

Before, he commuted to his work when he was in the province. Now, he has two luxury cars. His wrife uses the government vehicle issued to him.

This guy was notorious in his province for shaking down business establishments and the Chinese community. Now, he milks the sequestered firm dry, along with his cohorts.

HILE PHOTOGRAPHing the happy faces of people power Edsa, Ed Garvida and I found ourselves clambering aboard one of three open trucks with heavily armed rebel soldiers at noon on Feb. 24, 2006.

The destination turned out to be the Broadcast Center on Bohol Avenue where other rebel soldiers were holed out since taking over the government-owned Maharlika Broadcasting System, or GTV Channe, 4. Like ants crawling out from everywhere, people continued massing outside, cheering and clapping their hands.

Embracing

As the gates opened, all of us surged inside, yelling and embracing one another like the victors in war movies.

Inside, I was elated to find many friends in the creative media. Johnny Manahan was there, Mitos Villareal, Orly Punzalan, Harry Gasser Some production hands I had worked with in Kanlaon Broadcasting System, which owned BBC CITY 2, RPN TV 9 and IBC 13 in Broadcast City, were also there.

We agreed that to help the revolution, we would have to power up the TV channel, which had been turned off by the rebel soldiers.

Punzalan told us he had seen some broadcast engineers in the crowd and he would form a technical group to switch on and man at least one production studio, and a Technical Operations Center, which is the heart of any broadcast engineering operations.

I volunteered to organize and direct the revolution's newscasts and on-air information dissemination. Ed would be the head news writer

I then asked Mitos, who came with her own broadcast-grade TV camera and crew to do her best to enter Camp Crame, commandeer a military helicopter and shoot the mass of humanity along Edsa in one continuous sweep.

Televised Revolt

In no time the cast of the "Champoy" TV show and the Apo Hiking Society were appearing live on camera. Soon, other entertainment personalities, big and small, came to participate in the live historic broadcast.

It was the happiest and most entertaining televised revolution the world had ever seen.

eras were all locked up inside individual lockers in the newsroom and I refused to break the locks lest we be accused of destroying public property.

We did not have any radio, either, to monitor Radyo Bandido for news about the revolution. Nor was there any feed from the wire services.

Last resort

Our last resort was the Far East Network. I phoned my household to record on the home VHS and audiotape systems FEN broadcasts of breaking Philippine news reports from CNN, BBC, NHK, as well as other American, European, and Austrahan networks, and feed me back everything through the Channel 4 telephones and transport over to me the recorded tapes.

What news we aired on the liberated Channel 4 emanated from the international media's coverage of breaking People Power events. Their footages were transmuted via satellite for broadcast in their respective countries. The same broadcasts were picked up and re-broadcast by FEN in Clark Air Base in Pampanga.

In short, the news that we aired about the 1986 Philippine People Power Revolution had to travel around the world first before we were able to broadcast it to our own countrymen.

Jaws dropped

At sundown, Mitos' group arrived from Camp Crame with at least two hours of varied People Power footage, and the most important one of all, the helicopter video of the mammoth Edsa crowd.

Our jaws dropped as we confirmed the enormous number of freedom-loving Filipmos massed on Edsa, from North Avenue to Broadcast Center to Cubao to Camp Crame to Ortigas Avenue to Shaw Boulevard to the Guadalupe bridge, with nary a space in between.

Much later on, I would be told by a former Malacañang official that when they finally saw the footage for the first time around 9 o'clock that night, he glimpsed tears forming in the dictator's eyes.

'Sorry I missed the revolution, Ninoy'

By Bill Formoso PDI Night Editor

TO MY EVERLASTING regret, I missed the grandmother of all people power revolutions.

When the topic comes up around this time of year on the anniversary of Edsa I, the people around me start recalling where they were and what they were doing-on Edsa of course. They talk of how they had felt finally kicking out a dictator, feelings that I shared but did not get to experience.

I was 10,000 miles away when Edsa I happened. My wife Chelo, daughter Beia and I were living in Sacramento, California, and Chelo was six months pregnant with our son Gabriel, who would be born in May.

After Ninov Agumo was assassinated in August 1983 and the Filipino people did not rise up soon enough against Ferdinand Marcos, I figured the strongman was going to be around a while longer-perhaps up till the time we planned to return home to the Philippines for good, which was in 1995.

While we slept

So when I turned on CNN on the morning of Feb. 22, 1986, I was surprised by the video coming out of Manila. The events had transpired while we on the other side of the world had slept.

Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Armed Forces Vice Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Fidel Ramos had turned on their patron Marcos and Jaime Cardinal Sin was railying his flock to Edsa to protect the two men and their supporters who had holed up in Camp Aguinaldo from the tanks Marcos and his chief enforcer Febrari Ver had sent to annihilate them.

Cory Aquino, Ninoy's widow and runaway winner of the snap elections Marcos had called and then so brazenly stolen just weeks earliet, was safely nicked away in a convent in Cebu shock and awe. Then she began to cry. "We should be there, we should be there," she sobbed.

Yes, we should have been there. Chelo after all, and Letty Jimenez-Magsanoc, the editor in cluef of this paper, at the time the three of us were working at the Bulletin Today in the '70s, were known as the only staffers with "balls" for continually testing the limits in the Marcoscontrolled press. If anyone deserved to be at Edsa, it was Chelo-Letty as we later learned was already there in a big way.

Instead, we had to content ourselves with monitoring CNN and making what seemed like a million phone calls to Manila to get updates. Our siblings, cousins, nephews and nieces, second cousins, friends, everyone, came back the phone reports, was at Edsa.

CNN, a fledgling network (ridiculed as Chicken Noodle Network) at the time everyone said wouldn't fly, confirmed what we were hearing.

There were Enrile, Ramos and a young Gringo Honasan crossing over to Camp Crame from Aguinaldo, where is would be more conducive to making a last stand, CNN said. That dad not sound too reassuring. There was the crowd-a huge mass of humanity-parting to let them through. We scanned the crowd for familiar faces.

On the second or third day of the uprising, we went to Halo-Halo, a local Filipino restaurant, where we met up with other Pinoys to say prayers for our country, exchange stories about what was happening back home, and eat Filipino food.

The following day, CNN showed Marcos overruling a sputtering Ver who was strongly lobbying to bomb the turncoats, and collaterally the people on Edsa who had become their human shields.

Suddenly the transmission was lost, obviously sabotaged, and the thought that Marcos may have given in to Ver had us on edge for a while.

Dancing in streets

When the coverage resumed, CNN showed the people dancing in the streets and then in Malacañang where the half-eaten scrambled eggs and caviar the cameras kept focusing on were like the final insult heaped on the Filipino people by the Marcoses before they finally fied the Palace.

Then there was Ramos leaping in the air, not once or twice, but enough times to leave him panting. And there was Enrile, who had spent much of martial law by Marcos's side, appearing to not quite know what to do with himself.

And then, and this was priceless, there were Marcos and party landing in Hawaii and being welcomed like tourists with the obligatory less by the state governor and his wife

It was finally over-14 years of oneman rule that had brought the country to the brink of hell. We are at IHOP (International House of Pancakes) that night with some friends to celebrate

At the restaurant the waitress asked if we were Filipinos. The daughter of one friend, who was born in the Philippines, said no, but our daughter Beia, who was born in New York and was all of three and a half, quickly said "Yes." We were so proud of Beia.

'You did great'

"You guys did great," the waitress said. The next morning, my bosses, a father and son tandem, congratulated me at work-for what I didn't know, I was thousands of miles away-but it felt good just the same. "Way to go, Bill," they said, flashing their thumbs

Other Filipino friends, and Pinoys m accounts in Fil-Am newspapers, Chelo and I sat in front of the TV in told of entering restaurants, elevators and other public places and being congratulated as soon it became apparent they were Filipinos.

Yes, it felt good to be a Filipino then, even in America.

What happened?

As a postscript, a few years later, when the news broke that Marcos's widow Imelda and their three children had been allowed back in the Philippines, those same bosses asked me: "What happened, Bill?" I could only shrug.

Thus when Edsa II happened, Chelo and I made sure we were there with Beia, Gabriel, our siblings, nephews and meces. And we didn't leave until Joseph Estrada did Still, from the stories I hear around this time of year, Edsa II could never compare with Edsa 1.

That is why, to my utter regret, and to the man who sparked it all, "Sorry l missed the revolution, Ninoy."

Last-ditch effort to mobilize yansang Makabayan (Bayan) managed to mobilize its forces along Espoña in Sampaloc, Manila.

Ar about this time, barricades had been set up on España from the University of Santo Tomas up to M. de la Puente. Several passenger buses whose labor union belonged to KMU were even used to block the intersection of Gov. Forbes and España.

It was also during this time that Bayan and KMU announced a nationwide strike the following day to force Marcos out.

I later learned that the strike was aimed at retaking the initiative of leading the masses by the NatDem (which, in rurn, was led by the Communist Party of the Philippines). This was obviously lost when the left failed to join Edsa as a result of the flawed decision by the higherups to boycott the Peb. 7 snap elections.

NatDem-led mobilization in España since I was a member of one of the numerous church-based institutions. I was only 18 years old and had just left the Cl-CM seminary in Baguio City.

Glaring absence

The absence of NatDem groups in Edia was very glaring since everybody knew that it chose to boycott the snap elections. I even remembered a group of red banner-waving workers affiliated with KMU marching around Edsa but were asked to stop by the raily leaders who turned out to be social democrats—the archenemies of NatDems.

Only the NatDem-led anti-election fraud group Tanggol Karapatan (Tapat) was able to hang its banner in front of a gasoline station because its leader was a nun, Sr. Mercy | coses left made Bayan leaders make a dementing cases of electoral fraud.

Later, CPP founder Jose Ma. Sison would also point to the presence of Tapat in Edsa as proof that the Nat-Dems were not absent in Edsa.

On España, it was late in the afternoon that Bayan, KMU and its other affiliate groups in the religious sector started the march on Malacañang, only to be blocked by soldiers still loyal to Marcos on J.P. Laurel.

Malacañang takeover

The Nat-Dem group had planned to hold a vigil here similar to Edsa thinking that when Marcos finally departed, the left would be the first to set foot and eventually "take over" Malacañang.

Prom España, the religious sector to which our group belonged proceeded to E. Rodriguez going to Mt. Carmel Church in Broadway. Unlike the people around us rejoicing because of the news that Marcos had left, sadness was written on the faces of most of our fellow church activists, as if someone had died.

I even heard some crying and blaming the boycott policy as the reason why the Left, specifically the Communist Party, failed to lead the masses in such a histone moment.

Bitter debate

A debate between two known responsible cadres of the underground Christians for National Liberation even erupted during an impromptu discussion but was stopped after cooler heads came in.

One of the cadres eventually was ordained a religious missionary priest while the other would later be arrested by intelligence operatives along with his wife in 1991 on suspicion of being leaders of the banned CNL. The bitter debate in the national democratic movement over the boycott error resulting in the failure to foresce an Edsa-type uprising would eventually lead to a split in the CPP and within the NatDem movement eight years later.

'We closed our eyes to soldiers beating us'

By Jake Reyes

(The writer, a college student then, is now a hotel training manager.)

S EARLY AS 3 A.M. ON DAY FOUR, WE HEARD ABOUT A company of soldiers coming from the Libis area who would try to secure Gate 1 of Camp Aguinaldo. We made preparations to resist them.

At 6 a.m. three groups, myself included, went to the corner of 20th Avenue and Santolan.

There, we saw amid the smoke of tear gas camsters soldiers overpowering pockets of civilians as they pushed toward Camp Aguinaldo. The soldiers stopped when they saw us.

We stared at each other for a few seconds, then I heard our leader shout "Upo (Sit)!" We all sat down.

The soldiers started beaung their shields with their truncheous, creating a very intimidating noise.

I remember I closed my eyes and prayed that the noise would stop. It did not. It even became louder. When I opened my eyes, the soldiers were just to Gate 1. five feet away from us.

I felt a tugging at my right arm. My companion was trying to break free of our linked arm formation. My mind went brank. I was seeing things in slow motion. I remember pulling my companion back and shouting at him to close his eyes.

I did the same and felt a shield being shoved at my face, pushing me until I fell down. I felt boots idcking me in my legs. Slowly, I got back on my feet again, then I felt a truncheon but me on my left shoul-

For Alex Padilla, then secretary general (on-leave) of the Nationalist Alliance for Justice, Peace and Democracy, the Left was left behind. "Definitely," he said.

He said the Left led the struggle against Marcos and the US for the longest time. "It always took the isutiative. The politicians would go to the Left if they wanted some mass support.

Maoist strategy

"But the strategy of the Left has always been the Maoist strategy, from the countryside. It always thought that urban unrest-insurrection—was always elitist and should not be supported," he said.

Padilla said the Left was not able to adapt to the modern thinking that "you have to get power where the power was, which is in the cities and the urban areas."

Lower units were left to their own devices in a fast-changing situation that was Edsa.

Without a go signal from the party executive committee, key members of the United Front Commission, which had sought a broad alliance against the "US-Marcos regime," called on a multisectoral organization to support the people at Edsa. A senior UFC member at the time recalled that he was on a seep when he heard on the radio Juan Ponce Enrile announcing his breakaway from Marcos.

When I reached home, I got so many calls ... asking the UFC what was happening. I said "this is the end [of Marcos]. That right we waited for instructions. There were none," said Roger (not his real name) the former UFC member, who doesn't want to be named because of his work with a nongovernment organization.

"Later, the party secretary general came over. He said 'the chairman di makausap (could not be contacted), shocked.20

"We said, If the leadership will not act, the core of the UFC will. So the next day, for the first time, we went to the [name of organization] headquarters, surprising its officials. Our directive was for it to go to Edsa," Roger said.

Supporting Fidel Ramos, then the vice chief of staff of the Armed Forces, and Enrile, then Marcos's defense minister, did not come easy for many activists.

"Why would we support them? Let them fight each other. They are our enemies," said Etta Rosales, then the director of the Popular Struggle Commission of the Bagong Alyansang Makabayan (Bayan), which boycotted the snap presidenna, election.

Her task was to coordinate mobilizations like welgang bayan against the regime, while the political opposition was calling for civil disobedience.

Bayan believed that Marcos would not give way to Aquino. "Then the US would still support Marcos. It was like a reagion isn't it? Dogmatically, we held on to that anatysis," Rosales said.

Anathema

She said supporting the military at the time was anathema to Bayan. "If we cannot accept Cory, what more the military? What will we do at Edsa?" said Rosaies, who was detained and tortured during the early days of martial law.

She changed her mind about Edsa when she saw the multitudes.

"We were really disoriented. We went to Edsa to take a peek. It was beautiful, amazing. People were felling trees. Of course that's against environmental concerns, but at that moment they were cutting down big trees to block the tanks. We went around and saw that Edsa was full of people," she said.

"Even my mother came. It was the most natural thing for them to defend the military [men], who defected from Marcos. They were telling us, 'why don't you give them roses?" said Rosales, now a member of the House of Representatives.

THEY WERE THERE even without a go signal from their party executive committee.

"Everything was moving fast. We had to adapt. This was something new to us," he said. "We thought that it was going to be a long, arduous struggle from the countrystoe.

He did not go to Edsa to support Ramos and Enrile whose split with Marcos he viewed with suspicion.

Kibitzer

"I was an ususero (kibitzer)," he said. But once there, he began to realize the significance of the event.

Suddenly, I felt I was partly responsible for this. It was the culmination of all your work in removing Marcos," said Padula.

"Even my parents who were at that time 70 plus were also there because, you know, Filipinos, . . . in times of trouble, [hold a] fiesta! My siblings also came. There was no feeling that they were in danger. Or even if there was, we couldn't care. I would not have died for Enrile or Ramos. I was in the periphery anyway, but I wanted to be there as a part of history," he said.

While officials of other organizations of the Left went to Edsa out of curiosity, leaders of the Kilusang Mayo Uno decided in a snap to proceed to the highway.

The KMU national council was crafting a program when Jaime Cardinal Sin appealed to the people to go to Edsa. Right then and there, the council heeded the prelate's call, said Crispin Beltran, then KMU vice chair.

Spark

"As if a spark was triggered "Let's do away with this meeting and proceed to Edsa," Beltran said of how the council came to the decision. "In the same way, the workers came in droves."

With red banners, more than 30,000 KMU members and supporters marched toward Edsa on Feb. 22, said Beltran, now a member of the House of Represen-

"The KMU decision to join Edsa [on the first day] was an independent deci-

Beltran said Bayan, an umbrella organization to which the KMU belongs, later affirmed the KMU decision. "Most of the organizations under Bayan joined," he

"At Santolan, policemen and soldiers handed over their guns to us." Beltran said. "They surrendered their weapons and joined the people."

The sea of people at Edsa coupled with the urging of former Sen. Lorenzo Tañada, then Bayan chair, prompted other Bayan officials to finally throw their support behind Ramos.

Tañada and Bayan president Lean Alejandro paid a call on Ramos, who was holed up in Camp Crame.

"We're together this time," Rosales said, quoting what Ramos had told Tañada, a nationalist opposed to Marcos and to the presence of US military bases in

Most organized

On the night Sin made the call over Radio Veritas, the religious sector hied off to Edsa. "The most organized group was the Christians for National Liberation (CNL). On its own, it made the decision—the Church Bureau actually,"

The group of seminarians who blocked the Marines on the early morning after Sin's appeal was under the command of the CNL.

He said the health group sent ambulances to Edsa and many activists went on their own, with the understanding that they would link up with the others.

By Jose Maria Sison's reckoning, Bayan forces accounted for a fifth of the people at Edsa

[They] constituted the hard core of the masses (at least 20 percent of the entire masses) at Edsa at the peak," said Sison, founding chair of the CPP, who was then a political detainee.

Sison, now based in the Netherlands and chief political consultant of the National Democratic Front, said Bayan was decisive in rallying us organized masses Sison also noted that 500 members of Bayan Quezon City accompanied Col. Mariano Sannago to capture the TV Channel 4 compound.

Main force at Mendiola

Although they were just part of the multitudes at Edsa, the people led by members and supporters of Bayan constituted the main force at Mendiola Bridge, a stone throw from Malacahang.

are divided over the view that the Left was left behind at Edsa.

"The assessment that the CPP leadership was left behind is correct. But the cadres, the organizations were all over the place," Roger said.

He said the leadership did not anticipate the events and could not respond immediately.

Caught flatfooted

Like the national leadership of the CPP, the party's Manila-Rizal regional committee was caught flatfooted. "Por all its talk of insurrection, it did not know how to respond. Its ABB (Alex Boncayao Brigade, an urban partisan unit) lay idle," Roger said.

But after it was made clear that the people must be supported, MR sent a contingent to Edsa, and conducted raids on police stations in Malabon and Tondo," he said.

Ricardo Reyes, a former member of the CPP Political Bureau, gave a qualified

Major force

"Yes" (it was left behind) if we think of Edsa as the result of that phase from the snap election to the four-day revolt. But 'No,' if we think of Edsa as the culmination of the anti-dictatorship struggle. The Left led by the CPP-NPA (the united party and army at that time) was a major force galvanizing the people's struggle against the Marcos dictatorship from the very day martial law was imposed in September 1972 to its ouster in 1986," Reyes said.

He said this clarification must be made to unravel the myth, which the elite later successfully wrapped around Edsa I to justify elite dominance and downgrade the contribution of mass-based movements.

Declaring that the Left was left out at Edsa amounts to seeing what happened in a narrow ideological perspective, according to Beltran

"It's part of the potshots thrown at the Left that was magnified by Rightist camps, which wanted to monopolize power," he said.

Beltran said the KMU was not only at Edsa but also in other parts of the country, staging a general strike in support of the claim to victory of Cory Aquino.

He said the general strike paralyzed transportation in Bicol, Cebu, Mindanao and Central Luzon. "We were in 14 of the 17 regions except Sulu, Zamboanga and some parts of Mindanao," he said.

Uprising outside Manila

Like Beltran and the others, Sison said the people's uprising outside Metro Manila contributed to the downfall of Marcos.

Bayan had the most organized masses rising up against the Marcos fascist dictatorship and neutralizing the pro-Marcos local officials in so many provincial capatals, cines and key municipalities. Bayan Angeles City stopped on its tracks the tank convoy of General Palafox. Gen. Renato de Villa put his command and personnel in alhance with Bayan Bicol in order to serve notice to Marcos that Edsa had a deep reserve in the provinces, "Sison said.

He also recognized the role other forces played in toppling the Marcos diccatorship.

"What was the most decisive force or what were the most decisive forces in the overthrow of Marcos? I would point to the broad masses of the people that showed up at Edsa and before the presidential palace. But I dare not single out any of the organized forces as the most decisive, without clear quantication, it was a convergence of various forces that overthrew the Marcos regime. Various forces were decisive in their respective ways," he said.

The legal and underground Left were most important and decisive in contributing the most tested and most organized masses that served as hard core of the broad masses at Edsa and elsewhere, according to Sison.

"But certainly the most decisive in emasculating Marcos within the ruling system and, at the same time, keeping the ruling system intact were the US, the Catholic hierarchy, the business groups, Aquino and her followers and those high Marcos bureaucrats and military officers who turned against Marcos," he said.

At Edsa, the Left did not lead the people, a reversal of its role as a vanguard of the struggle against Marcos for the most part of his dictatonal rule, but it was a significant part of the uprising. Denying its role at Edsa is to misread that part of Philippine history.

HEN WE HEARD THE VOICE OF THE LATE Cardinal Sin on the radio asking the faithful to go to Edsa, I personally felt that God was drafting us to fight evil.

So I wrote my last will and testawishes for my three older children in case my husband, I and my youngest son perish in the battlefield of Edsa.

My husband and I decided to bring the youngest whom we feel would be most vulnerable if left behind.

I saw Cory at POEA

By Jesse Baylon Jr.

WE WERE IN A RESTAUrant in Manila debating whether to follow Cory's request to boycott San Miguel beer After much discussion, because it was an issue of national importance, we decided that we loved our country more than San Miguel beer and ordered fruit juice instead.

We took a cab to go home and were told by the driver about Cardinal Sin's plea for people to go to Edsa to protect Enrile and Ramos. But, sad to say, our fears got the better of us.

On Monday, we finally decided to go to Edsa. A bus took us up to a certain point of Edsa and we had to walk to the corner of Ortigas Avenue, where we saw sandbags and barricades. A huge crowd was there in a festive mood.

Early in the afternoon, Cory's group came. It was a brief appearance only at the POEA building where she "Ama prayed Namin"-The Lord's Prayer-with those present at the corner of Edsa and Ortigas Avenue.

in the evening, while queuing to make a telephone call at the Tropical Hut grocery, somebody shouted that tanks were coming. I stood still, frozen. I was already looking for a place to hide when-to my shame -we saw a group of women, including nuns, rushing to defend the barricades with their bodies!

Portunately, for us men, it was a fa.se alarm. That single experience, however, was quite a revelation. Women were far more courageous than the men!

Alvarez completes Eagles' reunion

THE MUCH-AWAITED ATENEO REUNION AT Red Bull finally came to fruition.

Rich Alvarez, last season's rookie of the year, has rejoined key teammates from the Blue Eagles 2002 champion squad after Alaska dealt him to Red Bull in exchange for the Bulls' 2006 and 2007 first-round picks.

Overflowing with players at the small forward spot, the Aces shipped the scrappy 6-foot-4 forward to ease the pressure on Tim Cone's rotation, Alaska team manager Joaqui Trillo told the IN-

"We have problems on how to divide the playing minutes on the court so what we did was let go of Alvarez and get more role players on board," said Trillo.

Earlier, the Aces also acquired Nic Belasco after trading Brandon Cablay to San Miguel in a move to strengthen the Alaska frontline.

DAVAO CITY-MANILA SOUTHWOODS THRIVED IN CONDITIONS it knows best to regain the lead from Canlubang and give itself a shot at repeating as champion for the first time in the Philippine Airlines Interclub golf championships here.

Tordits Asistio opened with a bogey but gunned down eight birdies the rest of way for a four-under 68 worth 40 points at Palos Verdes. That boosted Southwoods to a 147 total and a three-round 415 aggregate—two points up on overnight leader Canlubang.

Toru Nakajima signed for a 71 worth 37 points and Miko Alejandro and Massimura Michio accounted for 35 each as Southwoods erased an 11-point deficit to take the driver's seat heading into the final round today at Apo Golf and Country Chib.

Canlubang drew 38 points from former RP Amateur titist Jun Bernis and a 36 from JR Tanpineo, but rookie Joseph Labajo and veteran Abe Rosal could do no better than a 30 each as the Sugar Barons slipped to 134 for the day and a 413 total. Ronnie Torrecampo failed to count for the second straight day with a 24.

"I still think everything is set according to pian," Southwoods skipper Thirdy Escano said. "Hopefully, we will do well (today) in Apo. We abready had our bad day there."

Southwoods lost a 10-point lead at the 7,079-yard Apo in the second round Wednesday to trail Canhibang by 11 at the start of yesterday's round at Palos Verdes.

Canlubang, however, enjoys a dear edge in local knowledge—the core of its final-day lineup started their careers at the tough Apo course.

We finished badly, but we're still very much in it," said skipper Luigi Yulo, whose Sugar Barons dropped seven points in the last two holes. Del Monte, the 2004 winner at its home course in Bulcidnon, posted a second straight 129 for 394 and all but bowed out of the title chase.

Buboy Jaraulla led Del Monte with 35 points to go with the 32s of

This was the same squad that took a terrible beating on Thursday from Canlubang rookes Jonel Ababe and Mark Fernando and Jay Bayron and Boyet Saragoza. Rosal takes over from Mario Labajo.

Cebu Country Chib wrested the Pounders division lead from Wack Wack after a solid 126 built around the 35 of veteran Ramontito Garcia at Apo Golf.

Mark Dy chipped in with 32, Jovy Neri accounted for 31 and Jojo Teongco had 28 for Cebu, which had a 348 total, five up on Wack Wack, which carded a measty 107

Palos Verdes stayed on top of the Sportswriters division despite a 97, its 10-point lead chopped down to three by Orchard, which shot 105 for a 304 total.

Zamboanga zoomed to the top of the Friendship division, shooting a day-best 96, also at Palos Verdes, for a 268 aggregate and a nine-point edge over Camp Evangelista (94). Two-day leader Stanford struggled with a 76 and dropped to fourth, two points behind third placed Maharlika's 253.

'The show will go on'

I CAN IMAGINE WHAT SOLAR OOO Peter Chanliong must have thought of me when I texted him. yesterday morning to follow up on the wrestling tickets requested by a media bigwig.

In retrospect, I'm surprised he even called mimediately in response to the text message. Under the prevailing situation, it sounded so insignificant, although 1 wasn't aware of the prevailing situation at the time.

The signal was not too good, so I couldn't make out exactly what Peter was saying. Did I hear the words 'state of emergency? I wasn't too sure.

Anyway, Peter promised to call later. He had just returned from a trip to the United States where he watched the Brian Viloria-Jose Antonio Aguirre fight in Las Vegas and the NBA All-Stars in Houston, Texas, and I knew he had his hands full, considering that the much-awaited WWE RAW LIVE was scheduled Feb. 24 and 25.

I wasn't surprised then that he failed to get in touch to advise me re the tickets, which is why I decaded to text him.

Just a few minutes after my brief talk with Peter on the cellphone, I turned on the television set. Although used to this kind of scenario, I did not realize the gravity of the situation. After all, the President had declared a national state of emergency.

I knew that classes had been suspended because of a projected coun d'état, but that happens all the time. What else is new?

But I didn't know about the attempted coup at dawn which was aborted by government forces. Or the humongous throng of unpassioned rallyists that had gathered at Edsa.

Until I switched on the boob

Peter must think I was absolutely chicless, or else my values were misplaced. Talking about wrestling tickets when thousands could be hint or die

The NBA cagers got so scared they decided to fly back home.

Needless to say the game (games?) was canceled. Consequently, the promoter lost a lot of money.

The coup never materialized.

At the time Peter called, I knew he was at the Crowne Plaza Hotel where the wrestlers were billeted Had they threatened to pull out of their commutment like the NBA cagers did years ago? Was Peter trying to convince them to stand by their communent?

I shuddered at the consequences should the show be canceled "due to unforeseen circumstances." Aside from thousands of Pinoy wresting fans being disappointed, a cancelation would cost Solar millions of dollars since they will have to remburse payment for the tickets which were sold out from floor to ceiling of the Big

All fears were allayed when Peter sent a text message early yesterday afternoon.

"The show will go on," he declared. I wondered if that decision was arrived at after a long, strained, heated exchange of words and a short impasse.

Peter showed no signs when I talked to him later. The wrestlers were never scared like the NBA cagers, he swore.

'Nevertheless we will provide them with maximum security and protection," he said.

The tickets—now rare as diamonds because they sold like hotcakes-were delivered at my doorstep two hours later. These were for the Feb. 25 show, of course.

CARLSBAD, CALIFORNIA-TIGER WOODS earned a hard-fought victory over Aus-

Woods, who posted a record 9 and 8 victory over the hapless Stephen Ames in the first round, had to work a lot harder against Allenby.

Singh also lost the first two boles in his match before recovering to bear Miguel Angel Jimenez, 2 and 1.

"Memoirs of a Gelsha"

D. Rob Marshall S: Ziyi Zhang, Gong Li, Michelle Yeoh

ROB MARSHALES SUMPTUOUS CINEMATIC adaptation, the director's worthy follow-up to the 2002 Oscar best picture, "Chicago," is a lush, meditarive depiction of Arthur Golden's bestselling 1997 novel, "Memours of a Geisha," about the oft-repeated tale of a poor girl who meets the unattainable man of her dreams.

The film retraces the life of Nitta Sayuri aka Chiyo (Ziyi Zhang) who, with her sister, is sold by her poor fisherman-father to an okiya (geisha house) in the late 1920s.

Then, Mameha (Michelle Yeoh), a legendary geisho, takes the awkward 15-year-old Chiyo under her wing to teach her singing, dancing, calligraphy, flower-arranging, playing the three-stringed shamisen and other ways to entertain distinguished Japanese gentlemen.

Charmed life? Not really, because there's something geishas are forbidden to do: Fall in love. When Hatsumomo (Gong Li), the premier geisha of the '30s, starts to feel threatened by Sayuri's burgeoning beauty, grace and popularity, she does everything to destroy her competitor. This is "Bitting Walang Ningning in kimonol But, will Sayuri's story have a happy ending?

Marshall's lavish theatricality and visual savvy capture the emotional depth and historical scope of the novel's detail-heavy narrative in sturming strokes

But, the director's vision would not have been realized without the movie's principal actors, who fit their roles to a T. Their respective motivations are expertly drawn and intricately woven together: Zhang is luminous and strong but sympathetic, Li conveys bitter angst and ambition, Yeoh projects strength and wisdom, Watanabe (as the Chairman, Sayuri's secret love) is dashing and dignified.

However, a flaw gnaws at the movie's technical strength and structural essence. While the individual motivations of the characters are empathetic, understandable and logical, the rouson d'être of the geisha mystique

Cooking tilt maintains frenetic pace

By Noelani Torre

IF THE CATCHPHRASE, "ALLEZI CUISINEL" doesn't hold any significance for you, then you've been missing out on one of cable television's tastier treats.

The opening words to "from Chef" literally mean "Go! Kitchen!" They signal the start of a cooking show that has amassed a following in practically every country on the planet that has access to a lifestyle channel.

Originally aired in Japan from 1993 to 1999, and constantly being replayed ever since, "Iron Chef" is not your typical cooking show. It features a charismatic announcer, a culmary showdown between two renowned chefs, and-literally-a secret ingredient.

Flamboyant

This mix of hot compension, flamboyance, gastronomic delights, and the pressure of a 60-minute time limit is a winner-and the savvy people on American television immediately picked up on it

However, the first attempt at creating an American version, dubbed "Iron Chef USA," was an unequivocal disaster. Hosted by William Shatner, who tried to do a Chairman Kaga (the original's colorful announcer), it looked more like a parody than a real show, and only had two episodes.

Success came when the Food Network tried its hand at the same format last year. Their version, "from Chef America," is now enjoying a second hit season.

The American Iron Chefs are Masaharu Mo-

"THE FLIGHT THAT FOUGHT BACK." Takes stories out of the fuzzy realm of hearsay, into inspiring fact.

Compelling decumentary about terrorism and heroism

By Nestor U. Torre

LAST MONTH, DISCOVERY CHANNEL aired an especially gripping documentary, "The Flight That Pought Back," about the fourth aircraft in the 9-11 terrorist attacks. You'll recall that the first two planes hit the twin towers of the World Trade Center, the third slammed into the Pentagon, while the fourth crashed into a field in Virginia.

Evidence

At first, some investigators didn't connect the fourth aircraft to the 9-11 terrorist plot. Soon enough, however, evidence surfaced that made the connection clear, and stories began to be told about the heroism of the crashed aircraft's passengers.

"The Flight That Fought Back" is a particularly impressive production because it authoritatively takes the stories out of the fuzzy realm of hearsay, into inspiring fact.

The documentary bases its treatment on a surprisingly large number of cell phone conversations that the doomed passengers had with their relatives while the hijack was in progress.

Particularly moving were recordings of the actual conversations, during which viewers heard the surprisingly calm voices of the hostaged passengers. At first, the passengers simply reported that their plane had been skyjacked. Soon enough, however, they were voicing their suspicion that their aircraft was part of a larger plot against the United States.

Under attack

This happened after one of the relatives reported to a passenger that the World Trade Center was under attack.

Thinking fast, the passengers concluded that their plane was headed for its own target, which they later pinpointed as either the White House or the Capitol in Washington,

They came to this conclusion after their plane took a 40-minute "detour" to the Washington area. They then weighed their options: Would they "obediently" go down with the plane, or would they try to gain control of it by joining forces to attack the terrorists in the aircraft's cockpat? Heroically, they decided to put the second option into play-and this is where the documentary reaches truly impressive and moving heights of heroic drama

Passengers |

That drama makes for involving viewing, and is rendered even more compelling by the intense portrayals of the actors who pray the heroic passengers in the program's rimoto, Mario Batali, Cat Cora and Bobby Flay—celebrity chefs whom Lifestyle Channel watchers will no doubt recognize.

In every episode, one of them is chosen by the Chairman (played by actor Mark Decascos) to contend with a challenger, who is usually another well-known chef. Then, the secret ingredient, which the contenders must use in five different dishes, is revealed.

In one of the previous season's most exciting shows, "Hot Off the Grill," Flay battled famed "East Meets West" chef Ming Tsai. Their secret ingredient: Duck.

Seconds after the revelation, the two chefs literally ran to their respective sections in the Kitchen Stadium, and started chopping and mixing away at a breathless pace. Cooking, this episode shows us, can be an actionpacked event'

Announcer Alron Brown (of "Good Eats") gave a well-informed commentary on the various culinary processes, and one could only marvel at Play's and Ming's feverish intensity. It was not unlike watching a car race, in fact, only even more impressive. These people didn't just have to cross the finish line, they also had to create a five-course meal that had to look like a work of art, be original and, of course, taste delicious!

The frenetic yet graceful pace was mainly what made this episode most memorable, but Ming's hi-tech way of separating duck skin from the meat (an air pump was involved) and his fore gras crème brulee certainly left an impression, as well. The winner, needless to say, was Ming Tsai, though Flay put up a very

For loyal "Iron Chef" fans, this toned-down version may not afford that much entertainment. But, if you're a foodie, you won't mourn the loss of Chairman Kaga's rhinestone-studded capes. Instead, you'll celebrate the fact that the competing chefs can still tell the viewer how to make 10-ingredient grits!

Spotlight on women directors at Bangkok filmfest

By Nestor U. Torre

AT THE BANGKOK INTERNAtional Film Pestival last week, we focused on a number of special concerns. One of them was the rise of female directors in international cinema.

The well-programmed festival enabled us to appreciate the unique contributions of female directors from a wide range of countries.

Attraction

From South Africa, Hermine Huntgebuth was represented by "White Masai," an important film about a Swiss woman on vacation in Kenya, whose powerful attraction to a Masai warrior inspired her to leave her boyfriend and follow her heart.

Contrasting races

The film explored not just women's issues in Africa, but also the many fascinating ways that people belonging to two contrasting races are different—and the same.

Frenchwoman Diane Bertrand does some playing around with races of her own: In "The Ring Finger," she has taken Japanese writer Yoko Ogawa's novel and transposed it to the industrial waof Hamburg, in terfront

From Switzerland, Ruxandra Zenide's "Ryna" is about the teenage daughter of an oppressive man who longed for a son, and thus forces her to dress and act like a boy.

Change

BEFORE THE PACIFIC WAR, PEOple of Japanese descent in Hollywood were relegated to playing Oriental gardeners working for the rich and famous. But, few people are gware that a Japanese actor had already made his mark in the film capital in the early part of the 20th

In 1913, Kintaro "Sessue" Hayakawa stopped by Los Angeles after his graduation from the University of Chicago.

A descendant of a Japanese aristocratic line, the young man was denied a military career because of partial deafness, so he turned to the legitimate stage.

Theater

In Los Angeles, he decided to become a part of a Japanese theater troupe, where his talent was immediately nonced. The young Japanese was later offered a film contract by producer Thomas Ince. who found Hayakawa an "exotic and expressive" actor-he was different: His controlled style of acting was in direct contrast to the broad gestures that characterized the acting styles of many thespians of the silent film era.

In Sessue's performances, he incorporated the measured, minimalist movement of traditional Japanese theater, particularly the esoteric Noh. Thus, the 25-year-old became quite a screen personality

Quiet presence

I am a fan of Hayakawa, as were Lino Brocka, Adul de Leon and Joonee Gamboa. As a student of film acting, I was impressed by his quiet presence as the distressed Japanese commander in David Lean's 1957 war classic, The Bridge on the River Kwai."

I thought it was ridiculous that Alec Guinness won the Oscar for best actor, while Hayakawa was denied the well-deserved honor in the best supporting actor category. That was one of my early but distinct disenchantments with the Academy Sessue had already delivered impressive performances in Tokyo Joe," "Three Came Home" and "Les Miserables." He later appeared in "Geisha Boy" with Jerry Lewis, "Green Mansions" with Audrey Hepburn, and "The Swiss Pamily Robunson."

'Momma' loses steam

By Noelani Torre

GUY PUTS ON OLD-LADY FAT SUIT AND poses as nanny, Sound familiar? This is more or less what Robin Williams did-very well-in "Mrs. Doubtfire," and is what Martin Lawrence is doing now in "Big Momma's House 2."

The sequel to "Big Momma's House," the movie has PBI agent, Malcoim Turner (Lawrence), donning a brassy wig, fat suit, and tent-like dresses once more!

This time, he needs to infiltrate the enemy camp—the household of a possibly erring software CEO-in order to find out whether Daddy has been selling dangerous software to the bad guys. And he has to do all this without backup, since he's not supposed to be working on the case in the first place.

Pregnant wife

While in the house, Big Momma bonds with the kids-one of whom doesn't speak and likes to jump off heights-while his very pregnant wife (Nia Long) back home thinks that he's having an affair. It's a subplot that looks like it could have been engineered just to set up the giant-thong joke

The entire story, in fact, looks like it was thought up by people who were just looking for the slightest chance to get Lawrence to wear his fat suit again. Why anybody would want to do that is a mystery. How many fat lady jokes can you crack?

Lawrence is amusing in his Big Momma get-up, but no amount of comical posing and mouthing-off can cover up all of the holes in this crossdressing caper. The plot is one improbability after another, and it's stretched too thinly even for a slapstick comedy.

LAWRENCE. Dons brassy wig and fat suit

Sentimental lines

Interestingly, when Lawrence is himself-that is, Malcolm Turner-he ceases to be funny. In "BMH2," if he's not stuffed in a fat suit, he's saddled with sentimental lines and general sappiness. You can OD on the sugar while you're waiting for a punchline that

On the upside, there's no bathroom humor, and the sexual references are mild, so it's generally family-friendly. Unfortunately, the movie also makes you crave for more raucous fare, if only because its pace is so slow.

Dinoy performers shine at HK Disneyland

By Rito P. Asilo

THE OPENING OF DISNEY and Hong Kong last September was welcomed by tourists from around Asia with great anticipation-and with good reason.

Despite its US$3.6-billion tag price, Disney's Magic Kingdom on Lantau Island is the smallest among five Disneylands in the world But, it has an ace on its happy sleeve that the company's theme parks in the US, France and Japan can hardly boast of: Pinoy performers.

On our recent trip to Hong Kong, we made it a point to visit Disneyland to see how our colleagues from the local theater industry were doing.

Ubiquitous sightings

Aside from magnificent castles (like the Lantern Castle) and ubiquitous sightings of Disney characters ake Snow White, Goofy and the Wicked Witch, the park was bustling with Filipino performers-actors, singers, dancers and musicians, who made a beeime for the cattle call early last year-and we were delighted to see them doing so well.

After a theater conference at the Fringe Club, we hopped on the Disney line of the MTR (the island's version of our MRT), and rushed to Disneyland.

We headed straight to the Storybook Theater, a state-of theart performance venue in the Magic Kingdom's Fantasyland, where performances of "The Golden Mickeys" -a 30-minute song and-dance revue that features a potpourn of Disney's classics in an Oscar-like awards show—are staged all day long.

We had to join a long queue for worth the long wait. We weren't just dazzled by its pomp and spectacle, we were likewise bursting with pride when we saw familiar faces onstage!

Pheona Baranda, playing the affable emcee, held the show together, from her feisty opening spiel to the rouciong finale although we were quite baffled by Disney's decision to have her speak only in Cantonese from beginning to end!

There were set pieces and specal effects that we've seen only on the West End's staging of "The Lion King" in London. Some of the Baranda wasn't the only Pinoy show's breathtaking visual mo-

Naturally, the familiar characters and their respective songs were a hit with the Disney-weaned crowd But, the best tune sung that afternoon was, ironically, not even a familiar one, sung by the musical's best singer Tex Ordonez. (She was also a sight to behold in the "Luo and Stitch" portion.)

Beaming with pride

We were beaming with pride when we met Tex, Rabbi and Pheona after the show. Despite our hectic schedule, the "conniving" the wouldn't allow us to leave the park without trying out its best rides, including the nightmansh Space Mountain (imagine taking a rollercoaster ride in space—jeepers!)

But, seeing them was the best treat for us. Rabbi, a resident director of New Voice, directed "The Blue Room" last year

Like Gannaban, Baranda honed her thespic chops at NVC. We directed her in "The Vagina" Monologues" and "Cabaret."

Ordoñez, on the other hand, was discovered when she was plucked from the chorus of Nestor Torre and Nonoy Gallardo's "Sino Ka Ba, Jose Rizal?" to take over the role of Jose Rizal's mom, Doña Teodora Alonzo, from theater veteran Joy Virata when the production had to tour around the coun-

We are particularly close to Tex because we toured Torre and Ryan Cayabyab's long-running "Magnificat," where she alternated with Pinky Marquez for the rose of the Virgin Mary, (She even learned to speak Visayan when the popular musical's Cebuano version opened in Davao in 1999!)

Acclaim

She later won acclaim for her scene-stealing performances in Bing Pimentel's "Nasaan si Hesus?," Atlantis' "Dreamgirls" and Ballet Philippines' "Darna."

Tex, Rabbi and Pheona are ust three of the many Pinoy faces in Disney's Magic Kingdom at the former British colony.

Indeed, the Happiest Place on Earth has conquered Hong Kong But, not without the heip of some of the hippest, happiest-and best-performers this side of the globe!

Thailand releases first animated feature

By Nestor U. Torre

FOR YEARS NOW, WE'VE BEEN persuading some Filipino movie producers to finance the making of full-length animated features. Thus far, however, nobody has taken the plunge, due to the big budget and long production time involved.

As one producer admitted, the local tendency is to aim for shortrange investments and recouping costs in only a few months. The two- to four year schedule for many animated features turns off producers here because "our money would be 'sleeping' for such a long time."

Big advanatge

That's the big advantage of animated features over other film types: they're largely visual, so they can be understood by and appeal to all sorts of viewers in different countries.

We gained these insights when we covered the production of Dreamworks' "The Prince of Egypt" and "Shrek" in Los Angeles. The lessons we learned there were made more significant by our interviews with Filipino ani-

Lazaro holds on to Raven's dream

By Jocelyn Vaile

AFTER SURVIVING TWO MAJOR OPERAtions that were supposed to have cured his obstructive jaundice in September 2001, Ray Ventura excitedly talked about his wish to revitalize the theater scene in the country. He chose to recuperate in Baguio, but a month later, the much-admired actor passed away

For his part, Ventura's friend, Ronnie Lazaro, doesn't want his colleague's dream to die. So, he put up Ang Filipino Mobile Theater two years ago. "It's an offshoot of Teatro Telecine, the theater group that Raven and I formed with Pen Medina in the '90s," he explains.

Respectable salaries

We wanted to uplift the state of theater and provide respectable salaries for actors. The movie industry has been having a rough time, and we felt that acting in stage plays was a good fallback. And something that we truly enjoy doing."

Just like Teatro Telecine, Ang Filipino Mobile Theater chose Rene Villanueva's "Hibiang Abo" as its showpiece, "Aside from the creative challenges that the material poses for actors, it also requires minimal sets, which is perfect for touring," says Ronnie, Ang Flipino Mobile Theater has seasoned actors on its roster: Lou Veloso, Bodjie Pascua, Archie Adamos, Joe Gruta, Crispin Pineda, Mike Lloren, Soliman Cruz, Sherry Lara, Madeleine Nicolas and Ermie Concepcion, Associate director Rolando Inocencio polishes the act based on the direction of Pen Medina.

RP, Indon deal on fisheries extended

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—THE PHILIPPINES and Indonesia have formally agreed to extend their fisheries cooperation by five more years with the signing of a memorandum of agreement here on Thursday.

The MOA, signed by Agriculture Sec. Domingo Panganiban and Indonesian Fisheries Minister Freddie Numberi, has paved the way for the continuous use of Indonesian waters by fishermen from this city and South Panganiban said the agreement meant a lot to Pilipinos, particularly the fishing sector.

With an average of total tuna landing in the Philippines of about 400,000 metric tons, the industry is estimated to be valued at about $420 million," Panganiban said

In this city alone, the fishing industry provides about 100,000 jobs

Under the agreement, both countries vowed to promote cooperation in the sustainable development and conservation of fish resource in their shared territories.

The government also agreed to enhance mutual consultations with Indonesia, exchange technical know-how, conduct joint research and economic cooperation on agreed areas of fisheries. Numberi said the specific details of the agreement has yet to be discussed and resolved by members of the Joint Committee headed by senior officials of both countries. Among the contentious issues that still eed to be ironed out is the sharing scheme

Nissan recalls X-Trail units

By Ronnel W. Domingo

PDi Mindanao Bureau

NISSAN MOTOR PHILIPPINES INC. YESTERday announced the recall of 4,070 units of its X-Trail sport utility vehicle as part of the global recall involving 475,400 vehicles.

Leman Lee, company president and chief executive, explained that the voluntary recall was related to the fuel miet to the gasoline tank, called the fuel filler tube, which may rust at the tube mounting bracket.

A pinhole may result from the rust formation, which can cause a fuel leak during full refueling, Lee said.

But the official clarified that developing a hole from rusting would take between 10 years and 15 years, depending on humidity and other factors.

In short, there is no real cause for panic over the short term, since the rust develops (after so many years)," Lee said. "However, Nissan Motor Co., Ltd. (NML) has decided to take a very proactive stand toward the issue by making a recall this early."

The worldwide recall affects markets in Japan, Canada, Europe, Africa, the Middle East and Asia/Oceania, including Australia, China, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Taiwan and Thailand.

In the Philippines, the recall will affect more than half of the 6,400 X-Trail units sold since the vehicle was introduced in July

The units covered are those made between

July 2003 and November 2004. According to NMPI senior manager Raymond Tribdino, the company usually assembles completely knocked down kits of X-Trails Imported from Japan a month before delivery to buyers. The official said the recall was expected to slash X-Trail sales-the firm's bestseller-in that, as in any recall, the public becomes wary at first but would soon judge for themselves, based on available information. Buyers would realize the impact of such a recall and soon sales will be restored to prerecall levels," Tribdino said.

"The cost of this campaign will run into the millions of pesos, but that is something that Nissan is willing to shoulder completely for the peace of mind of our X-Trail buyers," he

Using satellite data to predict landslides

By Tessa R. Salazar

HILE MULTINATIONAL search and rescue teams look for survivors buried under mud and rubble in Barangay Guinsaugon, St. Bernard in Southem Leyte, a team of scientists in Japan is hard at work interpreting what their "eye in the sky" is "see-

Joel Bandibas, a Filipino researcher based at the National Institute of Advanced Industrial Science and Technology (AIST) in Japan, and his team specialize in remote sensing, artificial neural network and geoinformation.

They sift through data provided by the advanced spaceborne thermal emission and reflection radiometer (Aster) satellite.

Raised in Leyte

Interestingly, Bandibas was born in Cebu City but spent his elementary and high school years in Santa Cruz and Sogod, Southern Leyte, an hour away from St. Bernard.

The Aster satellite was able to produce snapshots of Southern Leyte on Feb. 20 and 21 The landshide occurred on Feb. 17.

Data from Aster, Bandibas said, help greatly in mapping areas affected by disasters which can be handy for rapid response of rescuers and renef efforts.

But locating survivors buried under 30 meters of mud and rock is beyond the satellite's capabilines.

Bringing thermal sensors to the site is far more practical," Bandibas said.

Natural disasters

Aster and Alos (advanced land observation satellite) are Japan's satellites used extensively to map large-scale natural disasters in the

The Philippine government this week requested the Japanese government to aim the Aster satellite at specific areas in Southern Leyte.

Pagasa officer-in-charge Graciano Yumul said the Philippines was also requesting Japan to look at the eastern seaboard so the country will have database before the actual

Aster data were used during the Quezon landslide, the East Asian tsunami in 2004, and the earthquake in Pakistan in 2005

Alos carries advanced sensors for environmental monitoring, and was launched by the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (Jaxa) last month.

The more important role of the two satellites is their ability to provide reliable data in determining the probability of a landslide in a certain area, Bandibas said.

These satellites also provide "before" and "after" snapshots of a disaster-stricken area.

Bandibas said the satellites can generate three-dimensional maps that indicate changes in geomorphology and vegetation coverage before and after a landslide, and may actually help locate buried structures and other landmarks.

Database from these satellites help researchers generate a more accurate landslide prediction system.

Bandibas said his group might be able to generate a landslide probability map for the Philippines soon.

Ateneo Grade School Math Olympiad

TWO WEEKS AGO, THE 4TH Ateneo Grade School Math Olympiad (AMO) was held with around 70 contestants from various schools. For several years Ateneo President Pr. Bienvenido Nebres, S. J. and I have offered a problem-solving class for selected college science majors, and after trying their hand at complicated problems, we challenge them to train promising elementary and high schoolers, with the AMO as the annual showcase of what everyone has learned.

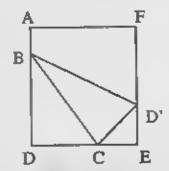

The AMO is based on the International Math Olympiad, the most prestigious math fest in the world. The emphasis is not so much on calculator-like speed, but on the appropriate mindset and perseverance required to reflect on a problem, and the creativity to come up with ingenious and elegant solutions. In the AMO, contestants are given three hours to write in detail their solutions to three complicated problems, which all go beyond standard math.

Grade school problems

The first three questions were given to Grades 5 and 6; the last three to Grade 7. (The middle problem was given to all.)

1. Find the smallest positive integer that consists of the ten digits 0 through 9, each used just once, and is divisible by each of the digits 2 through 9.

2. A 16 cm x 25 cm rectangular piece of paper is folded so that a corner touches the opposite side as shown. The distance AB = 5cm, FE = 26 cm, DE = 16 cm. Find (BC)2

3. A shipping clerk has five boxes of different but unknown ety for the logistics, and the Ateneo weights. Unfortunately, all of the boxes weigh less than 100 ib and the only scale available reads only weights over 100 lb. The clerk decides to weigh the boxes in pairs so that each box is weighed with every other box. The weights of all possible pairs are 110, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 120, and 121 lb. Determine the weights of the five boxes.

4. Find all triples of positive integers (a, b, c) that simultaneously satisfy each of the following conditions.

 $\mathbf{L}\mathbf{a} + \mathbf{b} = \mathbf{c}^3$ h.a+b+c=130

nii. 19 is a factor of a - b.

Lucky number

S. A number N is called a lucky number if it is the sum of some positive integers, the sum of whose reciprocais is 1 That is, N is lucky if there are positive integers a, b, c, (not necessarily distinct) such that N = a + b + c, .. and if 1/a + 1/b + 1/c + ... =1. For instance, 4 and 11 are lucky numbers since 4 = 2 + 2 and $\frac{1}{2} + \frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{1}{2} = 1$; 11 + 2 + 3 + 6 and $\frac{1}{2}$ + 1/3 + 1/6 = 1.

a. Show that 24 and 31 are lucky numbers.

b. Show that if N is a lucky number, then so are 2N + 2 and

There was only one gold medalist: Darwin Ivan Carrasco (Pampiona Elementary School).

Maching Aydinun (Ateneo Grade School), Carmela Antomette Lao (St. Jude Catholic School) and Alvin Uy Lim (Grace Christian Grade School) got silver medals, while Miguel Sebasnan Santos (Southridge School), Geraldine Baniqued (St. Paul's Pasig), Zhang Zi Xin (Grace Christian), Patrick Puache and Paolo Magabo (Ateneo) got bronze medals

The winners also received books from Scholastic Inc. and math and science toys from Fundamentals inc.

We acknowledge the Ateneo Problem Solvers Group for coaching the boys, the Ateneo Math Soci-Grade School and High School administration and math faculty for supporting the project wholeheartedly. We look forward to next year's AMO. We believe that with proper training, our youth can hone their skills to the fullest.

Sit up for romance

VALENTINE'S DAY IS OVER, but it doesn't mean that romance itself ends for another year. There are birthdays, anniversaries, Christmas, New Year's, and even tomorrow. Massie Movies and books usually set up romantic evenings as follows: the lights are dimmed, scented candles are lit and placed everywhere, music plays softly in the background, a bottle of champagne and two glasses stand on a table, roses are in a vase, and rose petals are scattered on the sheets. The idea in such setups is to seduce ail the senses.

A McGill University study suggests that once the parties involved are lying down, the rose petals on the bedspread may not not smelled.

Lundström, a postdoctoral fellow under Marilyn Jones-Gotman. Dr. Jones-Gorman is a pro-Neurology and Neurosurgery and her lab is affiliated with the Montreat Neuro.ogical Institute. The paper first appeared in the advanced access section of the Chemical Senses journal's web-

Body positions

The researchers are not the first to tackie the question of how well one can identify odors from various body positions such as standing, sitting, or lying down. One previous study had people identifying odors while either right side up or upside down, which is generally unlikely for most people to do. multitask, and will be felt but Another study employed a different set of body positions and The work was done by Johan six participants. Since so few people were involved, their data mey have skewed the results.

The McGill study had 36 volfessor at McGill's Department of unteers between the ages of 18 and 35, half of whom were women. The test was fairly straightforward. The searchers first laced several felt tip pens with serial dilutions of phenyl ethyl alcohol (PEA), better known as rose odor, mixed with odorless propylene glycol. Other pens were only laced with propylene glycol.

The pent, also known as Sniffin' Sticks," were selected because they could be easily sniffed whether the participant was sitting up or lying down. If a test tube was used, the results might be affected.

Participants were blindfolded and asked to sniff the pens while lying down. They smiffed two odorless pens and then one scented pen, starting from the lowest dilution, working up to the strongest odor.

Once each participant identified two scented pens in a row, the researchers worked backward down the dilution scale to have them identify the lowest dilution scented pen they could smell and then worked back up the dilutions to identify the strongest odor. After several passes, they established a threshold for each participant. The volunteers then had several minutes to rest and clear their sinuses of the rose odor before repeating the experiment while

Brain association

The results showed that 63 percent of the participants had trouble identifying odors while lying down. Unsurprisingly, the participants had a wider threshold of odor sensitivity sitting up than they did lying down.

Why there is a difference between the results when one lies down as opposed to standing up is still unknown.

in a press statement, Dr. Jones-Gotman speculated that the brain may associate lying down with preparing for sleep and therefore the senses aren't as aware as they might be other-

The study also suggests that neuroimaging studies that involve MRIs or PEB may have slightly different results if the participants could be monitored sitting up rather than lying down, which is what the equipment requires them to do. The good news is that future romantic encounters need not be too expensive; silk rose petals may be more expensive at first than the real thing, but they are reusable.

Menopause drug may have positive effect on heart

By Charles E. Buban

A DRUG USED TO PREVENT AND treat osteoporosis in postmenopausal women was recently found to have a favorable effect on

According to Lotis Calinawan of the drug manufacturer Eh Lilly, a study found that women who have increased risk for cardiovascu.ar events and who took the drug raloxifene (Evista) for four years had a 40 percent reduction in coronary and cerebrovascular events combined, compared to those who took placebo.

The Multiple Outcomes of Raloxifene Evaluation (MORE) study, however, found that overall, women who took ralox, fene were no more likely to have a cardiovascular event than those taking placebo.

Calinawan said the additional benefits of raloxifene on the heart could only be conclusively proven In a large-scale, controlled climcal trial, which is why the Raloxifene Use for The Heart (RUTH) study was initiated in 1998.

This study involves more than 10,000 postmenopausal women with coronary heart disease or with risk factors for coronary artery disease. Results of the study would not be available for several years yet.

Female sex hormones

Raloxifene-was originally designed to selectively act as an estrogen on the bones, but not on estrogen can increase the risk of cancer for postmenopausal wom-

Estrogen—the female sex hormones-helps protect women against cardiovascular diseases during their child-bearing years. Experts believe these sex hormones shield the younger women's hearts to some degree by boosting levels of high density lipoprotein, the "good cholesterol," and keeping levels of low density lipoprotein, the "bad cholesteral."

But the protection is temporary as the incidence of cardiovascular diseases, including the thickening of the arteries (atherosclerosis) that serve the heart and limbs, high blood pressure, angina or stroke increases substantially following menopause, when a woman's estrogen levels begin to taper off.

Hormone therapy

This is why women who experience moderate to severe symptoms of menopause are often pre-breast tissue of the uterus where scribed with hormone replacement therapy (HRT).

HRT was believed to be an ef fective treatment against the long-term effects of having low levels of estrogen, which include heart disease and osteoporosis, as well as other menopausal symptoms such as hot flashes, mood swings and sleep disorders.

But in 2002, a landmark study found that it raised the risk of heart attack and stroke.

"As a result, doctors no longer prescribe the combination of estrogen and progestin to prevent chronic disease but instead use HRT only for short-term relief from menopausal symptoms," said Calmawan.

The Women's Health Institutive, a medical research intuated in 1991 by the US National Institutes of Health, found that even though HRT lowered women's risk for bone fractures and colorectal cancer, those who took it for five or more years have increased their risk for heart disease, stroke, blood dots and breast cancer.

Gov't seen offering residual stake in PNB to Tan group

By Doris C. Dumlao

THE GOVERNMENT MAY EXERCISE ITS option to sell the state's remaining 12.5 percent stake in Philippine National Bank, valued at about P3.5 billion, to the Lucio Tan group after efforts to sell the shares to small local investors failed.

Philippine Deposit Insurance Corp. yesterday and the subscription to the government's offering of 20.7 million shares to retail investors was "minimal." The shares were offered from Dec. 13 last year until Feb. 15.

In a statement, PDIC said the government had an alternative exit mechanism, which is to exercise the option to sell to the Lucio Tan Group its remaining shares by August 2007 at P48.80 per share. This was based on the par value of P40 per share before the joint bidding of the government's and the Lucio Tan group's stakes in the bank last year, plus а 10-регсепт interest per аппиль.

"We will exercise our put option unless someone else offers a better price," PDIC president Ric Tan told reporters yesterday.

Tan said that if the bank could post strong profits this year, there might be other investors willing to pay a better price for the government's residual stake

PDIC, the state agency in charge with the bank's privatization, had expected the lukewarm response of the market to the retail offering due to the declining share price of PNB during the offer period.

Investors apparently decided not to buy the PNB shares when they found out that the government's asking price was much higher than the market price.

PDIC controls 9.48- percent stake or 54.36 million shares while the national government directly owns 3.05 percent of the bank or 17.45 million shares

Although the government had anticipated the poor market interest in the retail offering, it had to undertake the share offer to small retail investors after seiling 72.14 percent of its stake in PNB to the Lucio Tan group last August 2005 pursuant to Republic Acts 7181, 7661 and 7886 (Privatization

Speaking to reporters on Wednesday, URC president Lance Gokongwei said the plan also jibed with Robinsons Land's plan to increase the number of shares readily available at any period-the so-called "free float"---to stock market investors.

"The board [of URC] is reviving plans [of selling the Robinsons Land stakel because of [the marker's] warm reception to URC," he said

URC presently holds a 19-percent stake in Robinsons Land. Both firms are owned by JG Summit Holdings Inc., the holding firm of the Gokongwei family. The shares of all three firms are listed on the Philippine Stock Exchange.

Earlier this month, the Gokongwei-controtted food company raised P10.8 billion by selling 730 million shares—a combination of newly-issued stocks and old shares from existing shareholders—at

P17 per share. Another 95 inclion shares were subsequently made available to investors as the initial tranche was oversubscribed

Gokongwei said the plan for URC to divest its stake in Robinsons Land would be executed "in the next 12 months."

"But there's no firm date yet," he said.

The proceeds to be raised from the divestment plan would be used to retire URC's longer-term bonds, after its short-term debts were paid off with the proceeds of the company's share sale earlier this month.

Gokongwei, who also heads Robinsons Land, cartier said the company would increase its free float to 40 percent from only 7 percent at present as part of a broader plan among the companies in the group to increase their profile among institutional investors.

pamain: audio entertainment indoors, outdoors

By Charles E. Buban

THERE WAS A TIME when architects and home planners skip outdoor audio system in the homes they design. For them installing these speakers were hardly worth the effort as they are vulnerable to the elements and that fact that outdoor sound is difficult—one needs many times the power to achieve the same apparent sound level as one would inside.

"But some of the best time at home is So. spent just outside home—on the patio, by the pool or just in the garden. Having an outdoor audio system will definitely enhance one's outdoor relaxation or perking up outdoor gatherings or par ties," said Wilson So, president and GM of Eleksis Marketing Corp. (customer_service@eleksis.com), exclusive distributor of Bose entertainment systems in the country.

However, So admits that while the outdoors may be the perfect setting for music, it is hardly the best environment for speakers.

Consistent delivery

"An outdoor speaker must consistently deliver the quality of sound one would expect from a speaker in homes. This is where Bose outdoor systems have an advantage as each speaker model is engineered and tested to withstand some of the worst that nature can dish out," said

To prove the worthiness of its Bose outdoor products, So informed that the company was recently chosen by SM to equip its biggest mall with Bose's outdoor audio products.

"If there is a place where we can highlight our technology and the worthiness of our speakers, the SM Mall of Asia, the biggest in the region and third in the world, is the right place for demonstration," said So.

400-hectare mall

Some 400 Bose Model 16 ceiling speakers will be installed in the common areas of this 400-hectare mall.

These high-performance, ceilingmounted loudspeakers are engineered for music and speech reproduction in a wide range of business applications including retail, restaurant and hospitality operations.

These speakers are further complemented with over 200 wall-mounted Bose Model 32SE foud speakers that will be installed in the outside perimeters of the mall's four main buildings.

"We will also install 100 Bose FreeSpace 360 garden speakers in pocket gardens surrounding the entire mall. As one may notice, we will be able to show our chents the different settings wherein a Bose outdoor audio system can be placed," said So.

Environmental

So added that Bose audio systems are environmental, meaning, while they are designed to provide high quality sound, they can be used in harsh outdoor environments.

"Bose engineers rigorously test these speakers by recreating extreme environmental conditions including rain, heat, ice and even corrosive salt and fog to assure long-lasting performance. Thus, these outdoor speakers can be placed practically anywhere," he said

He added that some of these outdoor speaker models can be connected to the Bose Lifestyle system so that the music heard indoors can also be enjoyed out-

What is sustainable coastal tourism?

MENTION COASTAL TOURISM IN THE country and instantly what comes to mind are Boracay, Palawan, La Union, Batangas, Moalboal, Camiguin and so many other coastal resorts. There are many countless resorts in fact, that it's impossible to name them all. With over 18,000 kilometers of coastline on more than 7,000 islands this is hardly surpris-

Unlike some landlocked countries with no direct access to the ocean, the Philippines is blessed in the sense that one is never too far from any coastline or coastal resort. This accessibility, which is most ideal and convenient for many of us, has also prompted the influx of many visitors. Although it has been economically advantageous to the country, this has also brought about environmental and social problems.

Some of these problems range from simple visual pollution caused by billboards and commercial signs that block or blot natural scenic spots to more complex problems like sand erosion, poor coastal water quality and solid waste being dumped on beaches. Many of the problems are brought about by poor planning and development.

Boracay's problems

Through the years, many have been indifferent to these coastal problems until 1997 when Boracay was declared unsafe for bathing. This shocked tourists and developers as Boracay was at one time considered as the world's most beautiful

Highly competitive business

The sad state of development of some of our coastal resorts comes at a crucial time when coastal tourism is becoming a highly competitive business as many countries vie for the attention of visitors bringing precious foreign revenue.

Today, many of these competing countries, stress the importance of sustamable tourism development, being a part of the largest and fast growing activity worldwide, which is international tourism.

Sustainable tourism dev't

Sustainable tourism development means tourism that is well planned, developed and managed to reduce its impact on the environment. It stresses that economic growth is reconcilable with the need to preserve the environment.

Sustamable tourism development means using, conserving and enhancing the resources of a place to allow the ecological processes to be maintained and the quality of life today and in the future is in-

It was in 1992 when the United Nations defined sustainable development, which means "development that meets the needs of the present generation without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs."

Design considerations

The following are some important design considerations for coastal resorts:

Green site development. For site planning, buildings should not be located along sites that are altered by cutting and filling. This means flattening elevated portions and filling up lower portions of a site. Development costs can be reduced when the existing features of a site are considered and retained.

Investment and maintenance costs can also be reduced if existing vegetation is re-

 Shoreline setbacks. Dwellings and other tourist facilities should be built away from the shore. Many coastal resorts do not follow this basic rule in development. When this rule is not followed, waters are contaminated with surface runoff and structures are exposed to wave and storm.

Different countries have different rules regarding setbacks for coastal resorts. For instance, in Indonesia a 100-meter shoreline setback is required from the water-

For the Philippines, the Department of Tourism has set a minimum setback of 30 meters from the seaward edge of natural

This serback has several advantages. The space between the developed area and the beach can be landscaped as an attractive open space to enhance and complement the view of the sea. It can also serve as a multipurpose area for small

Water supply. Water is a crucial element in coastal resorts. It is important to determine if water is available in the area and whether it can fill the needs of the resort. Space must also be provided for the treatment of wastewater.

 Building height. For coastal resorts, building height, which is measured from the ground to the top of the roof, is limited to the height of the surrounding vegetation. For the Philippines and other countries in the region, the height of the coconut tree is used as

COASTAL resorts are often plagued by negative environmental impacts caused by tourism. Some of these problems are badly designed and located breakwaters; wastewater flushed directly into the sea; and beach walls that cause sand erosion.

 Cultural and historical sites. Green design considerations must give due importance to existing cultural, historical and scenic areas in coastal resorts. Some communities are offended when dwellings are built near sacred sites, but with proper planning, these sites can be protected and preserved.

 Green building design. Dwellings should maximize the use of daylight and natural versilation. Although some guests require air-conditioning for their rooms, if the guest rooms are passively designed and comfortable, they will not be dependent on the mechanical cooling system. Providing adequate roof insulation can alto help cut down heat gain that may enter

 Hi-tech facilities. A very effective way to minimize the impact of dwellings along coastal resorts is by using renewable energies such as solar and wind power. By resorting to these systems, coastal resorts can be self-sufficient in their energy needs, especially those in remote areas not connected to the electric grid.

 Beach erosion. For coastal resorts, one of the least understood hazards is beach erosion. One common way that developers use to solve the problem is by constructing concrete seawalls or sheet piling. This system is not effective because it increases the reflective energy generated at the base of the seawall, thus scouring the sand. Eventually the wall will collapse.

To prevent beach erosion a close analysis of the site must be made before any work is done. Next, a setback must be estabushed before work starts. Avoid mining sand from the nearby sandbars. After a storm has altered the beach, let the normal beach cycle return the sand.

 Success factors. The success of coastal resorts hinges upon site selection and how the property is used. That is the only path leading to sustainable tourism.

Lakeshore Subdivision to be issued a CDO

THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF Central Country Estate Inc., the developer of Lakeshore Subdivision located on the North Expressway in Mexico, Pampanga, headed by its president, architect Nestor Mangio, is facing criminal and administrative investigation initiated by the Department of Agrarian Reform, the Housing and Land Use Regulatory Board and the Department of Environment and National Resources.

The records of the case revealed that sometime in November 2004, respondent Central Country Estate Inc. was already selling and transferring the title and ownership of more than 1,000 subdivision lots in its proposed 48-hectare property located in Barangay San Rafael, Mexico, Pampanga, even without a DAR conversion order which is a patent violation of Article VII, Section 34 of Republic Act 6657, or the Comprehensive Agrarian Reform Law of 1998.

Transfer of ownership

Secondly, the bulk of the property is owned and registered in the name of farmer-beneficiaries because the Department of Agrazian Reform issued titles and ownership of the land to the tenants/farmers through the Certificate of Land Operation (CLOA) and respondent Nestor Mangio caused the transfer of the ownership of the land in the name of their corporation even though the 10 years prohibitory period has not yer expired, a criminal and illegal act punishable up to six years imprisonment under the CARP Law.

Initial investigation also revealed that Central Country Estate board of directors sold the proposed subdivision project even without a License to Sell from the HLURB, a flagrant violation of Presidential Decree 957, likewise a criminal act punishable up to 10 years imprisonment

Additionally, respondent Nestor Mangio failed to secure a development permit from the office of the municipal mayor of Mexico, Pampanga, and an Environmental Compliance Certificate (ECC) from the DENR. A Cease and Desist Order (CDO) is possed to be siapped against the further development of Lakeshore Subdivision by the DAR and the HLURB.

Lot buyers of the proposed subdivision project are expected to file a criminal complaint against Nestor Mangio and the board of directors of Central Country Estate for estafa.

Minimalism, color, lighting provide keys to maximizing condo space

CONDOMINIUM LIVING HAS LONG been the choice of both the young and single working professionals whose search for a quintessential abode puts premium on how well it can provide the modern conveniences they crave for and how fit it is to accommodate their carefree lifestyle as well.

Now, their residential preference still stays but with a change in status, they are demanding something more—that their space include their families without giving up the comforts that they have come to enjoy in the place they will call home. For condo living, according to DMCI Homes, is lately attracting the young couple types who are often with a kid or two and, therefore, have different sets of priorities and needs.

For most condo dwellers, converting a 42-square-meter floor area into a comfortable living space for a family of three to four is quite a challenge. But for the DMCI Homes' pool of planners, architects and designers, it is a problem that can easily go away by simply applying three basic interior-design techniques. These are color harmony, minimalism and proper lighting.

These techniques find embodiment in a two-bedroom, 42-sq-m condo unit of Mayfield Park Residences, a resort-residential development by DMC! Homes in Pasig City.

Colors enhance space

DMCI Homes is advising a firsttime condo occupant to pick a neutral color for his/her unit and apply the same color in varying shades in the different areas of his/her abode. A color's strongest shade must be applied in the accent walls, preferably in the living room; shades in varying lightness from the same color will do well in the rest of the unit's areas.

For baseboards and ceilings, however, a darker shade is preferred to draw the eye on the walls instead to create an optical illusion of a wider space. This painting job is very much evident in a Mayfield Park Residences' unit. The walls are painted cream and the baseboards are done in tan. The same color scheme is followed in the bedrooms.

Minimalism is key

The right furniture also makes the big difference between clutter and order in one's unit. Choose furniture that is both decorative and functional so you will have need for only fewer items and save on much needed space, DMCI Homes' experts advise.

In the combined living and during area of a Mayfield Park's unit, a fourseater table that complements the subdued colors of the accent pieces is used, thus providing continuity of the visual character that begins in the living area.

in the bedrooms, bedside tables that double as a study table and dresser fit perfectly as well as built in cabinets with multilayered drawers and shelves.

At Mayfield Park, it also helps that a separate storage area is provided for every unit at the roof deck of each building. In this area, all other seasonal decors that may be recycled again are stored and don't have to compete for space inside the living quarters. Decors and major pieces of furni-ture inside a Mayfield Park unit are handled by Elegance in Wood.

Lighting is everything

When applied in the master's bedroom, yellow lighting from bedside lamps give off a warm glow that turns the overall mood at the area from bland to romantic and dreamy.

And collectively in the living and dining area, a few pin lights and floor lamps may be alternately used during rare occasions where a little drama is called for such as entertaining guests.

Mayfield Park Residences model units answer to the yuppie's special need for a flexible and comfortable space that can accommodate his family without straining his carefree lifestyle.

A PASSION FOR DETAILS WILL ALWAYS BE the driving force behind building a community. More than just creating a row of houses, it takes a great amount of foresight to bring to life a harmonious master plan that could meet the residents' present requirements while providing room for growth in the future.

Thus passion for details has been at the heart of Brittarry Corp. in all of its pursuits. In concep-tualizing Brittarry Bay, however, the maverick real estate developer claims supremacy in creating that most unique, high-end property in the country's capital. More than just a master-planned community, the Brittany Bay development is now acknowledged as one of the most popular urban centers south of Manila.

Within this unique enclave located 20 minutes away from the central business district of Makati is an exclusive neighborhood that provides for the various needs of today's demanding lifestyles. This 50-hectare property plays host to different residential developments that promote a higher quality of life with all the conveniences that modern living entails.

Unique communities

Brittany Bay is a well-crafted urban center that integrates various unique communities which include: La Posada, a single-detached home and lot with picturesque bay windows and porches; Victorianne Row, homes reminiscent of San Francisco's Postcard Row; Presidio, iow- and mid-rise condos offering a spectacular view of both Laguna de Bay and Sierra Madre; and Viera, a complex of mid-rise condos with commercial establishments on the first two stories.

While the overall theme—San Francisco's arclutecture and lifestyle—ties the different properties together, the uniqueness of each one is unmistakable. The Victorianne Row, for instance, is perfect for couples who are just beginning a fam-ly. La Posada, on the other hand, is more spacrous and can house larger families to provide greater privacy for its members. Pinally, Viera is perfect either for singles with a very active ifestyle or for balikbayans in need of a place to stay instead of repeatedly infringing on their rel-

"While it takes passion to create a community, t takes devotion to the clients to develop an urban center," said Serrano. "Brittany Bay is a testament of Brittany Corp.'s devotion to the Filipino people. Allen Bacallan of General Milling Corporation is one of many other Globe users who were the first to experience the power of Globe 3G since January. He cites the usefulness of video sharing for his company.

"Show me the product, show me the display."

From his office at the Export Bank Plaza, he asked one of his staff members to call him from the convenience store nearby to do an impromptu trade check. Through their Globe 3G phones, he was able to see how his products were displayed on the store's shelves as well as the inventory. But more importantly, he was able to check whether they stood out against the competing brands on the same shelves. They did.

"I got the information I needed right on time."

This February, Allen arrived early for a meeting at the Shangri-La Hotel. While waiting for the meeting to start, he watched the latest news from ANC on his phone.

Thanks to Globe 3G video streaming, he got up-tothe-minute prices of commodities just in time for the meeting.

The faster transmission speeds and higher bandwidth of Globe 3G open a lot of doors for new and innovative services that help you in making more informed decisions faster. In addition to video sharing and video streaming, you also have video calling that lets you see and hear who you are talking to as well as fast browsing and even faster downloads for internet surfing and downloading at DSL speeds.

Where is Edsa?

By Pepe Diokno

T'S EDSA TIME! TOO bad it had to fall on a L Saturday Kids from La Salle and Poveda though, congratulations, enjoy your off-days! See, for a lot of us Feb. 25 means two things. One, no school. Two, potential for social unrest, therefore, no school. (We win both ways.)

The 1986 Edsa revolution happened a little over a year before I was born. Me, and people my age, are at the head of what's called the "post-Edsa generation." We don't know what the martiai law years were like. We don't know what Edsa was like. Don't get us wrong though, we'd sure like to know.

We were told that the martial law era was a really dark one. But we're kinda in the dark, too.

Yes, we know all the facts about the revolution, down to Ninoy Aquino's burthday. We know the fairy tale story: How Marcos, a powerful dictator, was defeated by the people because they were one.

But in the end, this is where Edsa dies for us. Edsa I has become this obligatory date in our history -a day without school! Edsa I has become a fairy tale, which most of us reserve for weird discussions or

We've all heard from the heroes and veterans of Erisa. How about a story from someone who wasn't there?

for days like February 25. The rest of the time, Edsa's

We relegate Edsa to these four days, we remember Edsa only when we feel the need to and we kill Edsa. When Edsa stands for protest, when Edsa comes out only because of oppression, then it's

It makes me angry that the revolution to most of us has become a set of dates and actions that bttle children memorize for Sibika. And I'm angry that most of what we've read so far is about the events that transpired, and the generals and politicians "who made Edsa happen." Edsa is not about them. Edsa is also more than the people who were there. It's even more than the leaders it has ousted.

Instead of General Ramos, let's talk about love. Instead of Cory, let's talk about permanent unity. Instead, let's talk about respect for our country and our fellow-men. When we do this, then I peaceful revolution. think we'd be at Edsa.

The best way, for me, to commemorate this day is to build an Edsa- anywhere, or everywhere. We don't have to camp out on the streets, but let's live in

Let's live in progress, in unity. Not in a world of disruption -but most certainly not in a world of EO 464s, and calibrated preemprive responses. We should exist for each other, as I imagine you did at Edsa.

Tomorrow is the end of the revofution celebration pomp, but it shouldn't be the end of Edsa, and what it stands for. The 'em yellow ribbons along the highways forever. Let's "Laban," even after we topple the next oppressive regime.

I'd i.ke to ask a favor from you who were lucky enough to have felt the joy of revolution. Don't tell us about it. Show us Edsa. A lot of us don't know what it looks rancis? Um, Francis where are you?

"Nasaan si Francis?" opens March 1! Where will you be?

By Pepe Diokno Stills from the movie "Nasaan si Francis?"

N MARCH 1, THEATRES will start showing a movie in which Epy Quizon plays a dead body, and Christopher de Leon, a drug dealer. How cool is that? It's not something you'd expect from these actors.

"I want to surprise my fans," Christopher says. "They're used to seeing me as this executive that's in love with this girl. In this movie, I'm a drug dealer but I'm dancing in some parts, dancing with the girls, going wild."

Christopher plays Rocky, to whom Francis owes money. Other characters in the film are Francis' siblings, Manong Jay and Lin-lin (Ricky Davao and Rita Avila), Francis' girl-friend Ana (Angel Aquino), and Karl Roy—who spends most of the film asleep. Uhm.

All these people are hunting Francis down and Boy and Sonny (Paolo Contis and Rico Blanco) are hiding him. Nope, this isn't a spoiler. We know where Francis is the whole time. What's funny is seeing all these characters interact with each other. When the drug dealer, the druggies, the prostitutes and the yaya come together at the end of the film, it's murder. "This was actually an entry into Cinemalaya.

"This was actually an entry into Cinemalaya. It didn't make it into the finals, but according to Epy, who also produced the film under his company Crazy Angie, Tony Gloria, who was one of the screeners of the festiva, saw the film and said, "I'd love to do this!" Tony Gloria became executive producer of the movie.

Epy also jumped all over his role—as the dead body. He refused body doubles and dolls. It told Gabby (Fernandez, the director) that I wanted to do everything myself. But they toss me around almost the whole time and at the end of the day, I'd have bruses, my bones would hurt. This is not an actor's role. It's a stuntman's role!"

Epy also did the project as a promise to the first-time director. Gabby Fernandez was trained by Peque Gallaga and has been his assistant director. Peque shares credit with Gabby for the story of "Nasaan at Francis." The film is actually based on the play, "Dilin na at Francis," improvised by the 2003 BEING batch of the Negros Summer Workshops which Peque Gal-laga handles.

It must be hard, though, for a writer and a director to deal with so many characters without overlooking any but it looks like Gabby's succeeded in bringing out a lot from his characters. "He's a director who collaborates. He gives you options on how to go about the character. Everyone worked together," Epy explains.

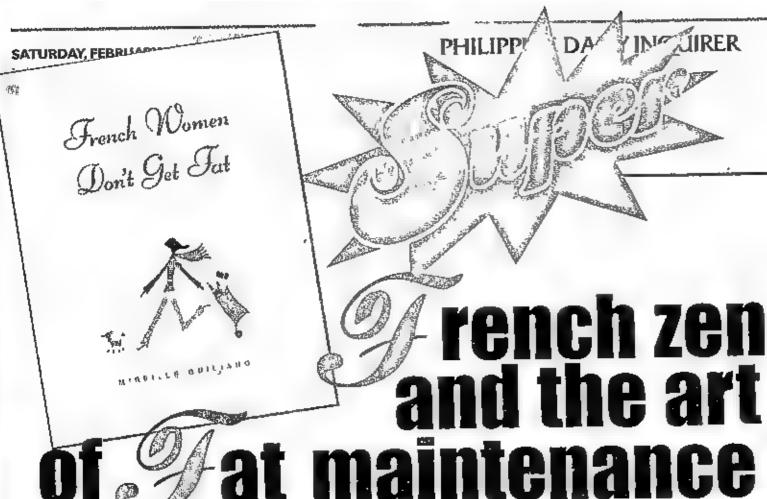

"He's very organized. He knows what he wants. He knows how to eliminate production costs, but still when you see what he's captured you know he did not shortcut anything. A good word to describe him is precise. You feel his youth in the movie that you're seeing," he continues

Christopher agrees. "Gabby is contagious. You feel his excitement, like he really wants to do the best with every take. Cause sometimes, with us old ones, we just say, "Let's just go shoot this," but it wasn't like that with this film. And that inspired me." It's cliché but it's true—you

THE YEAR IS 2006, AND THE people are restless. They are panicking about the very real threat of killer kilos and a slowing metabolism. Thus, a rebellion is brewing against all things fatty and fried. The modern battle of the bulge is upon us! Soon, it shall escalate into a full-scale war against weight gain.

I didn't have to press my ears hard against the walls to hear conspiratorial whispers everywhere. Over coffee, girlfriends divulge their secret weapons in the form of little herbal pills, appente suppressants and ickytasting teas. In the gym, guys add a thousand more sit ups to their usual routine in the hopes of trimming down their holiday bellies. At dinners, everyone's chattering about the latest fad diet, whether it's the South Beach Diet or the Boracay Beach Station Two (hqu.d) Diet I even got wind of the ultra-effective Cabbage Soup Diet, a natural diuretic, a coup d'etat carried out in the kubeta. All this fat phobia leads me to wonder what is the real enemy, carbs or paranoia?

Truth to teil, I used to be oblivious to all this diet diajogue, because I would just not be bothered to skip meals, much lessgasp!—cut out rice from my dinner plate* But this skinnier-than-thou, French fry-loving, Happy Mea.head recently, reluctantly, joined the rebellion against all things fattening, when I was struck by extra poundage that creeped up when I wasn't looking. Blame it on the endless string of houday revelues, and the fact that eighty percent of the people I know seem to be born in January and February.

The 'Die' in 'Diet'

But I would especially like to credit the renowned tactlessness of many Pinoys who find no wrong in commenting biatantly about other people's bodies to their faces. Tell me what is the proper response, other than an open-mouthed, dumbstruck look, when as sailed with a blithe comment like, "Homay gad, tumaba kat!!" (I've actually whittled down the best snappy comeback to this one Lner "Homaygad, pumanget kah!!!")

So I officially jumped on the bandwagon of masochistic mutineers against all things deb crous and chocolatey in the world, and started to eat like a rapbit. Except rabbits have better rock 'n' roll while hving in Ralph Lauren Land. But that was before Ralph Lauren himself runed everything. (The irony blows massive donkey balls.) More on that in a bit. The irony, not the donley bares.

Dem bag of bones

The skull, apparently, didn't start out chic. A macabre symbol of---duh---death, it has been given mondo religious connotations in several culrires are ind the world.

Before Columbus touched down in America, for example, the skull was givon an esteemed place in the religious symbolism of the Aztecs. To this day, heir descendants, whether Indian or of maxed European and Native American her tage continue to honor human hones during the national Day of the Dead. Nicole Richie, now you know where you will be worshipped.

In Nepal, the use of skull beads on mallas is still common. Hand-carved from yak bone and made with 108 beads, they can be used either as prayer beads (much like rosaries) or as necklaces. Nepalese mallas have also become popular among devotees who worship the goddess Kali or the god Siva. (Meanwhile, I bought similar beads along Melrose Avenue not knowing what they were for, just because I thought they were, like, rad. Anyway.)

Boo, y'all

But among tons of Europeans, the skull is more spooky than spiritual. The skull-and-crossbones combo, known as the Jolly Roger pirate flag, already had several versions by the 1700s. Some had a full skeleton holding a sword or an hourglass as a heads up to the pirates that time was running out or some-

In the case of Edward Teach, a.k.a. Blackbeard, an 18th century marauder who kicked the bucket in 1718, the Royal Navy beheaded him and mounted his skull on their ship. And after the Nazis added the "death head" to their umforms circa WW2, Mel Gibson, a.k.a. Hamlet, chatted one up, a dude former ly known as Yoric, in the 1990s.

These days, though, skulls, skeletons and bones have been tamed altogether, and one normally sees them during Halloween. Or New York Fashion Week. Which rucely brings me back to my point.

Once morbid and kinda gnarty, the anti-establishment skull sign is totally trendy right now. Judging by the recent avalanche of press that this fad has brought in, the apgrade from goth to glam could go in many directions.

On the one hand, adopting this skeletal style can be a stroke of genus if it came from an artiste with a rogue sense of humor Known for his rebellious streak, designer Alexander McQueen is said to have popularized skull chic. In 2003, his skull-print scarf was photographed on starlets like Siemaa Miller and Lav Tyler.

Witty Imater Lucien Pellat-Finet's $2500 skull-print cashmere sweaters are also one-offs. In fact, the French label has collaborated with Jacob "The Jeweler" Arabo to create its own version of hip-hop bling. Using his trademark skulls and cannabas leaves, Pellat Finet has produced two watch models with sporty rubber straps and diamonds, totaling five carats. The price of the ice? A cool $45,000.

Your home can embrace its unser goth as well. Skulls are giving traditional home furnishings a jolt, appearing on formerly stuffy toile pillows and moonlighting as Livite paperweights.

Kiss of death

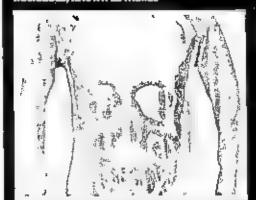

On the other hand, skulls and crossbones are becoming so popular that even unlikely designers are weighing in on the trend.

Ralph Lauren's Rugby line boasts more bones than a graveyard, splashing the image on oxfords, caps, notebooks, pants, leather jackets, ties, sweaters and, of course, rugby shirts. Maybe it's a not-so-subtle nod to Skull & Bones, (Nicky Hilton scatters skulis throughout her Chick line. Boo.) I tell you, it's the kiss of death.

An about-face?

Steeped in the masculine ideals of aggression and arrogance, the skull mouf used to be a unique and under-theradar way to inject good old-fashioned punk rock into an outfit. But all the fuss surrounding something I thought I only shared with a clandestine few has forced me to rethink my principles

Now that the preppy archetype I used to distort has co-opted the same imagery with which I distorted it, my world has become a weirder place. Even rosanes have become acceptable accessones, so nothing seems subversive anymore. If, like me, you, too, were a cleancut led with radical aspirations, what would you do? more to do with a healthy mundset more than a skinny-ass frame. The author called it "French Zen," or finding that balance between willpower and pleasure. Some quick bites to chew on.

There are no quick fixes

In this insta-moodle society, everybody wants overnight results, which explains the popularity of fad diets. Other than instant weight loss, that goes for instant success, love and fame. But nothing of value in life happens in an instant, the things that are truly of worth need the extra thought, effort and time.

· Variety will go a long way toward compensaring you for those things you miss-you will actually find yourself not missing them so much. Rage against "gastronomic boredom" or "horing eating," and opt for experimentation and improvisation. Good for your diet, spicy for your life, tool Novelty is a powerful distraction, so leave your comfort zone and try something exciting for a change.

 "Tout est question d'equilibre."—Every thing is a matter of balance. This is the quintessentially French mantra that says no master of both your narcissistic and hedonistic selves.

"Bien dans se peau," meaning to be "comfortable in one's own skin" If we constandly live with other people's standards, then we'll never be happy.

• There is no substitute for joie de vivre. Truly, there are so many other things in life that are far more important than obsessing about weight gain, like love, laughter, and, um, cable television.

Now there's some food for thought, which eventually curbed my growing mania for dieting and fat-watching Come to think of it, everyone's obsession with weight issues seems a bit . amusing now Because when it starts controlling you, or taking over every damn conversation in the dinner table, bar, or water cooler, after a while it does start to grow than.

world we all call home, there is that one person you can run to for anything. From buying spark plugs to taking out the wine stain from your favorite shut. You also wake up with a tingling sensation at the break of each day, knowing that you can talk to someone about the mundane details of your day and they're genuinely interested. You feel a connection with someone and to be honest, I know of no better feeling that involves another human being that can give one such joy.

I'm not out to preach the virtues of coupledom. It's just that I feel that in today's world when you have seminars that teach you to toughen up, assert yourself and be the captain of your designy there seems to have been a loss of emphasis in vulnerability. And for one to be in a loving relationship it is key that you leave a soft spot that another person can use as the entry way into your being. At the end of the day, vulnerability really shows that we have become so courageous that you are not afraid of anyone or anything that will push you off the edge.

To individuals out there who are on the verge of getting into a relationship or contemplating venturing into one, I just have this to say. As in any relationship, responsibility is key to its success. We've all heard it before and sad to say that it still holds true even in this age of play stations and sonic jet flights. It is best to be fu.fiiled as an individual than look to another person to fill in that vacuum inside of you. If you approach a potential boyfriend-girlfriend relationship this way, we have one sure recipe for disaster. What even works better is having a full and rich spiritual life that will anchor you well in your faith. After all, a relationship is one of the any gifts that GOD brings to you that truly tests how you have grown in HIS spirit. A relationship becomes a manifestation of how your values have developed. So in this season of love, people out there may be in that crossroad—that "the should-I-stay-or-should I go" phase. Be still. A number of revelations come when you strain to listen to the whispers of your heart, just resolve to use your head after you give air

By Mae Young Super! contributor

SELF-CONFESSED RELATIONSHIP neophyte posed a rather intriguing Aquestion. After much thought, the question burned and later turned worrisome. "What changes happen when boy and girl finally take their relationship to that level when they are finally IN an exclusive relationship?" ·It made me really think.

I'm not a relationship maven. What's even tricky is the fact that I've not been conscious of how I've morphed from one stage of the relationship to another. So then, here I am, just trying to make sense of things myself. Setting aside those rose-tinted glasses, I dare to venture into this query, hopefully to enlighten other affair amateurs out there.

1. You will encounter a lot of worrying.

When you love someone, it becomes second nature. You just turn into a big, fat, worrywart. You can't help it. If you want to have a clearer picture of this, think Mom. But I digress. You'll be hounded by questions like What if the car she's driving loses gas and the next stop is 100 meters away? What if the salad he's about to eat has dreaded particles of eggplant bits that gives him an allergic reaction resulting to that awful, hacking cough? Has she noticed that that the toll booth guy is actually becoming "too friendly" with her? And that lady guard? Has he nouced how much whiter her teeth have been. You have a a gazillion-what ifs. We've all been there and eyes it felt logical then as much as it feels silly now. Well, too bad that buyer's remorse has no counterpart in love land. Once you've thought it, it festers and then you wonder why they fix just one color for jealousy when you see red and feel blue.

2. You will be broke.

And you thought the expenses ended when you were a-courning! Gentlemen, when you're so into the love of your love you just plan, collaborate, scheme and cook up ways to be with her, make her feel special, and this ultimately leads to making you feel good. The dinners for two have just stepped up a notch to vacations for two. Now, you may be footing the bill but take heart. Women too have their share of things they get broke on. These include the siew of brand new outfits, the pedicures that accompany the new peep toe pumps that you bought by the dozen and maybe even the trainer sessions you signed up for at the gym to maintain the whistle-bait figure that you know he just goes ga-ga over. Different genders, same bottom line.

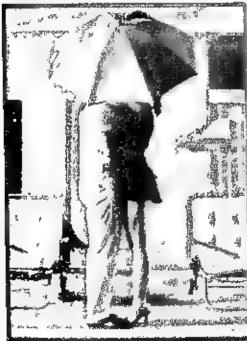

3. You will have disagreements.

You are now adjusting to each other's actual rhythm. This is not to say that you have both put your best foot forward during pre-together phase. It's just that your expectations are of a different level now. The good thing about fighting though is that it really helps you understand your partner better. This then leads you to understanding yourself better which, by the way, has never been a bad thing. Another perk when you fight would be making up. We said making up and not making out, okay?

4. You will feel differently

From a Pinoy Big Brother secret to the best crispy 'pata' ever

TITH THE SUCCESS OF "Brokeback Mountain," forward thinking societies all over the world have been throwing "Brokeback" parties, with cowboys, and all, in full regalia indulging in bacchanalia (rhyming, wow!).

In our shores, some people still get queasy when they view the film, labeling it as "too gay" Really, it's just a love story between two people, it's just that they're wearing cowboy hats. And one of them is blonde.

Speaking of blondes, a Superi secret source says that sometime this week, Pinoy Big Brother Celebrity edition will unveil a big "Brokeback" secret.

Brokeback... brother?

For the first time in Philippine television history, a closeted gay celebrity will reveal it all. So what's the big deal? Well, really now, these days, it's okay to be gay. What's not okay is pretending NOT to be when YOU ARE.

Another person who is said to be riding the Brokeback wave is Brad Pitt, who is reportedly looking for a gay role. We wonder what Angelma thinks about that. Although we're pretty sure she has a lot of other things on her nund-with a Brangelina spawn on the way.

No more Tom-Kat?

Another Hollywood baby that's due to asrive is TomKat Jr. but Tom Crusse and Kaue Holmes seem to be too busy in their battle against Life & Style Weekly to think about baby bottles now. The magazine has been persistently printing cover stories on the couple's alleged split. And the two have been persistently denying it.

As if Tinseltown isn't waiting for enough babies -- there's also Gwyneth Paltrow's-- rumors are now circulating that Britney Spears might be pregnant again.

Sex videos—this time without Paris

Then there's Kid Rock, Kid Rock who has resurfaced from oblivion because of a sex video that has been circulating online. Oh yes, Kid Rock is very angry—he might even sue.

It seems that all these celebrity sex tapes have inspired amateurs to follow suit. What kind of world are we living in? Last Thursday's top Technorati search was "Tammy NYP," referring to a Singaporean cheerleader whose jealous rival supposedly stole her phone and uploaded dirty videos of her online. Why did she have them in the first place?

A very angry Oprah

Speaking of highly downloaded clips, did you see the one where Oprah fried James Frex, the author of "A Million Little Pieces?" Oprah was fuming mad because she fell for James Frey's hes. In one of her shows, she applauded his supposed memours of drug addiction, saying it kept her awake all night, She even named it as an Oprah's Book Club selection making sales of the book skyrocket. But James had fabricated the story and fictionalized his past to sell books. Sell books he did. Make Oprah mad he did too.

Kelly vs Simon, Donald vs Martha

If he could turn back time, would Simon Cowell be as nice to Kelly Clarkson as he was during American Idol's first season? According to numerous websites, the Al judge ripped into Kelly after she refused to let the contestants of APs new season sing her songs. Simon reportedly said, "No matter how talented Keily Clarkson is, she would not be in the position she is now without winning this show... 1 don't like when they walk away from the show and kind of forget the people who put her where she is today." Kelly has since relented-now contestants can sing her songs.

Whoopee. Speaking of more battles, Donald Trum and Martha Stewart are having it out over their own versions of The Apprentice, But no one really cares, right?

NORMALLY STAY OUT OF THE sun whenever I go to the beach. I take this time to rest and wake up during sunset to savor the night's activities. But this trip was different. The games, celebrities, and activities were just too tempt ing—I couldn't resist.

The annual Nivea Visage Celebrity "fun in the sun" is hands down the longest running celebrity and media gathering this sumny side of town. Now on its fourth year, it has been island-hopping all over our 7,107 islands that I

I slupped the first day and decided to sleep. With enough rest to pique my competitive streak on the second day, I chose to be on the blue team, lead by equally, if not more competitive Ernie Lopez. I would have joined the "more fun" team of his wife Jeena but she left on the second day. Besides, Rica King, the lady who has made Nivea number one, was on our team. The Orange Team was intimidatingly filled with giants, while the Yellow Team was composed of pretty powerpuffs.

The White Team represented Nivea's "whitening" products while us, the Blue Team, fell under the deodorant category. Why? I don't know.

N-I-V-E-A Bohol!

Bohol is special to me in more ways than one. Ever since Bea Zobel Jr. took me on a heritage preservation tour of the place, I have fallen in love with the city famous for its tarsiers and the Chocolate Hills. That whitethemed party night, Bohol's pride, the Loboc Children's Choir, serenaded all of us with their gift of song. Collective goosebumps and onstume changes after, the awards were given out. We got second place! With 2.5 points behind the Yellow Team, this trip's champion. I salute Joey Marquez's gesture of donating the prize money to the Loboc Chudren's

Choir so all of us did the same. The night ended (actually it went on and on till we arrived back in Manila) with Bohol Star Peanuts, endless bottles of Alize and Skyy Vodka, plus great company, lots of laughs and celebrities showing their suntans and letting their hair down.

From where I was, I stared out onto the beach. The giant signage of N-I-V-E-A lit up the place, almost like a premonition of a bigger adventure next year.

page and showed her pictures of the other shoes. One time, my cousin, boyfriend and I were whipping up a midnight snack (sixig and fishballs—what a combination) and I used the Blackberry to find a recipe for fishball sauce. I almost burned the sauce but that cannot be blamed on the gadget.

During an intense craving for Quickly's Choco Taro Ice, we used the Blackberry and logged onto Clickthecity.com to look for its branches. And while we were in Baguio, Google searches made with the Blackberry belief us find a good hotel.

with the Blackberry helped us find a good hotel.

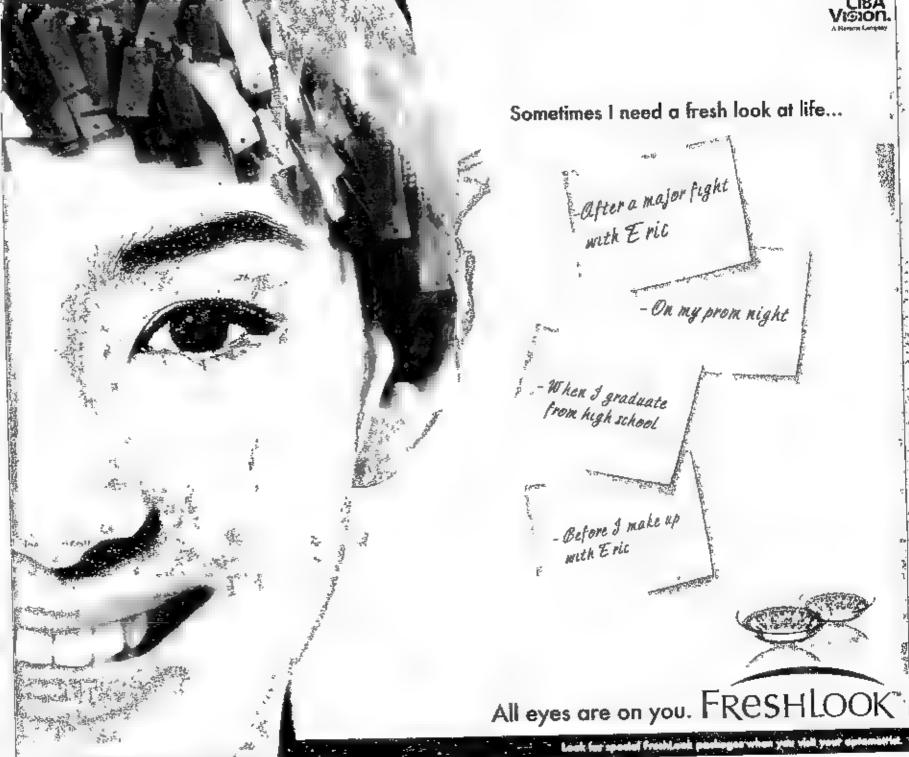

The Blackberry settled arguments as well—including one on how the late great Rene Requiestas began his show biz career. And whenever we watch movies and start wondering where we had seen this or that actor before, a quick Internet Movie Darabase check was all it took for our minds to be at peace again.

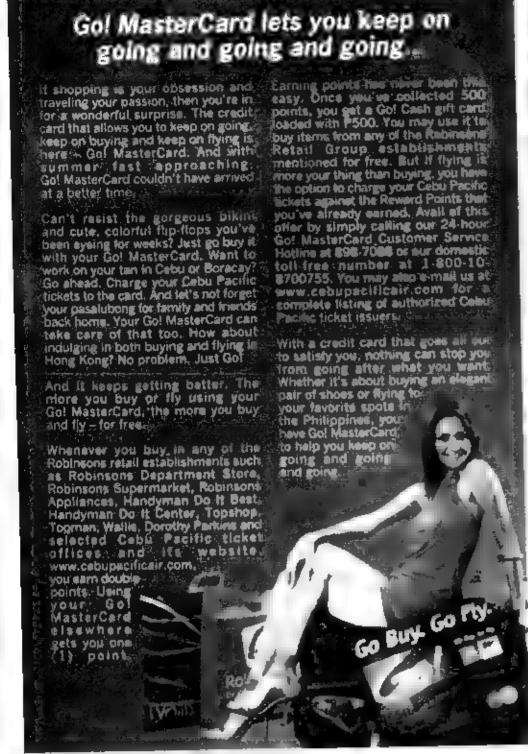

There's no doubt about it, the Biackberry became a good friend, a constant companion. Thanks to us e-mail, phone and Internet capabilities, I felt so connected, like I had the whole world in my pocket. There were even mornings when I'd reach out for it first, completely ignoring my mobile phone.

Still, just like in any love affair, there are little things that I wish I could change about the Biackberry. The scroll is still my good buddy, I think it's an excellent tool but I wonder how left-handed users would adjust to it. And I would really much rather have the old QWERTY keyboard which features individual buttons for every letter in stead of the SureType keyboard which has QWERTY-style layout but has two letters sharing every button.

My laptop's back, I've said goodbye to the Biackberry and now it feels as though there's a big gaping hole in my pocket. I experience withdrawal symptoms—they swoop in when I least expect it. When I'm watching a movie and I see a familiar face that I can't place, when we're trying to figure out where we'll eat, when I feel the need to check my e-mail and I'm in the middle of nowhere. Traffic-plagued cab ndes will never be the same again.

D LIKE TO THINK THAT IT WAS PATE THAT brought me and the Blackberry 7100g together. The triming was just too perfect.

Legether. The timing was just too perfect.

How do you explain the fact that just like the list time, the unit arrived while I was in the middle of reading a book that put the almighty mackberry in the limenght?

Last year, it was Meg Cabor's "Every Boy's Got me" which uses Blackberry ressages to tell parts of the the massage room. I laughed at how crazy she was, trying to send e-mails while hiding the unit under her tower. I had no idea that I would be her in just a matter of days. But I'm getting ahead of myself.

The Blackberry also came during a time when my beloved laptop, my 3-year-old Compaq Presario 2515, decided to put itself in a coma and stay there. You can say that for the next few weeks, the Blackberry was the key to this e-mail junkie's sanity.

Just like the 6230, the 7100g lets you receive your e-mails anywhere, anytime, without having to sit in front of a computer or carry your laptop around. Globe's Victor Virug helped make sure that the unit would automatically receive all my Gmail e-mails. And unlike your normal GPRS-capable mobile phone, the Biackberry pager lets your e-mails come in like text messages would.

But the 7100g does not stop at just plain old emails.

With its high-resolution display which supports over 65,000 colors, you can now open photo attachments and change your unit's wallpaper.

Not only can you use the 7100g for phone and e-mail functions, it also has a web browser so you can surf your favorite websites.

The Blackberry 7100g has a number of other features including an address book, a calendar, a memo pad and a task list. It is equipped with a speakerphone and Bluetooth capability for headsets and car kits and has a 32 MB memory.

Technes love ratting off specs—but for me, the greatest measure of a gadger's value is how it becomes a part of your everyday life. And the Blackberry became a big part of my life—at least for a few weeks.

Thanks to the Blackberry, I was able to approve blog comments and Friendster requests no matter where I was. Cab rides flew by quickly and the horrible traffic became my friend—it gave me more time to read my fay vorite websites. I tried testing the Blackberry's capabilities by loading really heavy pages—Singaporean Xiaxue's photo-heavy blog and Perez Hilton's gossip-heavy blog but they loaded quickly. The Blackberry gave up on only one site—Pink is the New Blog which really is unreasonably heavy. Even my computer browser has a liard time loading that page.

The Blackberry became a big conversation tool. One day my lunch partner was admiring my shoes and instead of just telling her about Schu's latest collection, I opened their Multiply

ARMED FORCES CHIEF OF STAFF Gen. Generoso Senga insisted yesterday he never talked to ex-Army chief Fortunato Abat or to other Arroyo critics about withdrawing support from the Commander in Chief during the days leading to the declaration of a state of national emergency on Priday.

Senga maintained in a telephone interview with the INQUIRER that he never entertained overtures for him to withdraw support from President Macapagal-Arroyo

"Abat was trying to get in touch with me. I totally ignored him," he said, denying an In-OURSER report quoting Abat as saying that Senga had been "receptive" to a dialogue with the retired general's group.

"I have not talked to anybody and I have no intention to talk to them," Senga said.

The Inquirer had quoted unidentified sources as saying that on the eve of the planned Edsa rallies last Friday, Senga was informed by Brig. Gen. The sources said Senga was "initially open" to the idea of a military withdrawl of support from Ms Arroyo but changed his mind after Army chief Lt. Gen. Hermogenes Esperon talked

"That's crazy," Senga said. "I deny that emphancally. There was no need for Esperon to convince me to do anything. I'm emphatic about this. I've never wavered in my commitment to my oath of office."

PDI columnist sees inequity in arrests first-hand

ACADEMIC RANDY DAVID, WHO WAS ONE of the ralliers arrested immediately after President Macapagai-Arroyo declared a state of national emergency the other day, said be was thankfut the police "made the mistake" of arresting him.

David, a University of the Philippines professor and columnist for the locumen, said his brief detention at Camp Karingal in Quezon City on Friday make him see "for the first time with my own eyes how we treat the poor in our society."

David, Aldrayan president Ronald Liamas and lawyer Argee Guevarra were arrested while leading a group of marchers on Edsa on Priday. The three were charged with illegal assembly and inclining to sedition but were later released.

David noted that while he and his companions were made to wak inside an au-conditioned room while their case was being processed, at least 80 people, including minors, who had been arrested earlier for a traffic violation, were being held at the camp's firing range.

He said he was embarrassed that there were at least 20 lawyers, including three senators. who showed up to help his group while "the men, women and children on three passenger jeeps from Bagong Silang, Caloocan City, did not have a single lawyer to help them."

Had he not been arrested, he would not have known of the predicament of the 80 who were arrested in various parts of Quezon City for riding in passenger jeepneys charged with "out-ofbne violations," David told reporters at a press briefing called by the Akbayan party-list group.

He was told the group was on its way to the People Power Monument at Edsa.

"It was only after we were about to leave at about 7:30 p.m. that were asked if we could help with their release," David said

Luckily, lawyer Eric Madonga, a child rights defender, was at the camp and was able to help the group. A social worker from the social welfare department also showed up to help with the minors, he said.

David said he was disappointed at how the Nancy Carvajal group was treated.

President Macapagal-Arroyo had to register among Filipino soldiers deep in the mud and mapping out coup was discussed in passing in our effort to help our brothers. We would not be disturbed (by taiks of coup attempts). We will continue our search and rescue operation," said May. Gen. Bonifacio Ramos, the Look around here. We are united overall ground commander of the rescue effort.

Ramos said that he and his men in the Army's 8th Infantry Division also remained steadfast in their support for the military chain of command.

"My position is to stay within the chain of command. This is not the time to destroy the well-being of the Filipinos," said Ramos

He said the military should not be involved in partisan politics.

"We adhere to our oath as professional soldiers. I and the 8ID will abide by the Constitution," he said.

Maj. Neneveigh Alcovindas, of the civil relations unit based in Tacloban City, stressed that all the officials and members of the 8th ID under Ramos were firmly behind the Commander-in-Chief.

"We will follow the chain of command. The entire 8th ID still recognizes the President as our commander in chief. The declaration (of a state of emergency) is not our focus and we are not affected by it," Alcovindas said.

Ramos said his primary concern was to continue with the work of locating and retrieving those still under the mud, the more than schoolchildren and teachers of the Guinsaugon Elementary School. Southern Leyte Gov. Rose Lenas commended the rescuers for their determination in continuing the search. 'Actually the very touching part is that the rescuers know, all of us know, that it is a very high-risk job, and the dangers they are exposed to. But in spite of that, they still have strong determination to push through," Lerias said

VATICAN CITY ---Pope Benedict XVI's envoy in Baghdad is leaving Iraq to serve the pontiff in the Philippines.

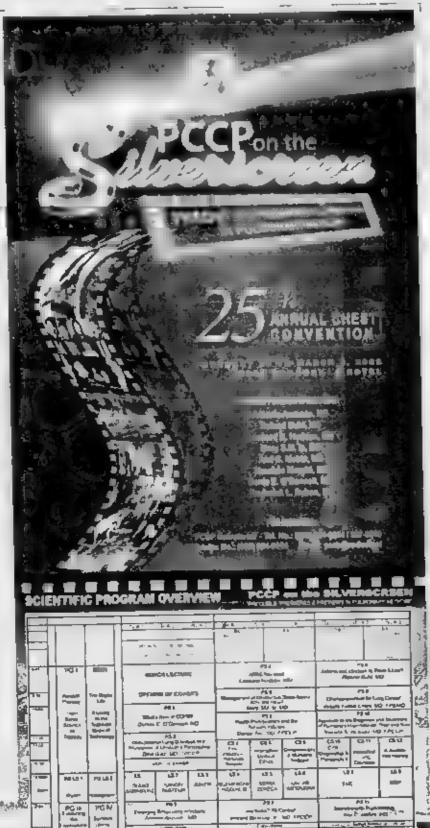

Monsignor Fernando Filoni, who also has been serving as papal nuncio to Jordan, was posted in Baghdad as part of the Varican's diplomatic corps in January 2001.

The Vatican's announcement Saturday of Filoni's new posting in Manila made no mention of who would replace him in Baghdad.

A month ago, when a car bomb exploded outside the Vatican's mission in Baghad, Filoni said fanancs and extremists were trying to scare the small Christian community in Iraq. Filoni also described suicide bomb attacks late last year in Jordan as an extension of the violence in frag.

The new posting takes the 59-year-old Italian to the Southgast Asian country with the largest number of Catholics. AP

'Emergency' could delay gov't, MILF peace talks

By Nash B. Maulana and Jeoffrey Maitem PDI Mindanao Bureau

COTABATO CITY - PEACE TALKS BETWEEN the government and the secessionist Moro Islamic Liberation Front (MILF) may be delayed anew due to President Macapagal-Arroyo's recent declaration of a state of national emergency, senior MILF leaders said yester-

Erd Kabalu, MILF spokesperson, said they were expecting a delay in the resumption of the formal peace talks as the Arroyo administration would be busy addressing the threats against the government

"But I suppose the peace talks would go on," he said.

Mohagher Iqbal, MILF peace negotiator, said they expect the declaration of the state of emergency to affect the schedule of the peace talks.

But Iqbal said the declaration would certainly not derail the peace process because it was not issued against them.

"We are not worried but we have concerns," he said.

Government chief negotiator Silvestre Afable, however, said the government would pursue the peace negotiations as scheduled.

THE DAILY GOSPEL

Sunday, February 26, 2006 8th Sunday in Ordinary Time Hosea 2:16-17, 21-22 1st Reading: God's love for Israel

So I am going to allure her, ead her once more into the desert, where I can speak to her tenderly. Then I will give back her vineyards, make the Valley of Achor a door of hope. There she will answer me as in her youth, as when she came out of the land of Egypt You will be my spouse forever, betrothed in justice and integrity; we will be united in love and tenderness I will espouse you in faithfulness and you will come to know Yahweh. 2 Corinthians 3.1-6 2nd Reading:

A letter of Christ Am I again commending myself? Or do I need to present to you letters of recommendation as some do; or should I ask you for those letters? You are the letter. This letter is written in your inner self, yet all can read and understand it. Yes, who could deny that you are Christ's letter written by us-a setter written not with ink but with the Spirit of the living God, carved not in slabs of stones, but in hearts of flesh.

This is how we are sure of God, through Christ. As for us, we would not dare consider that something comes from us, our ability comes from God. He has even enabled us to be ministers of a new covenant no longer depending on a written text but on the Spirit The written text kills, but the Spirit gives life Mark 2. 18-22

New wine into fresh wineskins One day, when the disciples of John the Baptist and the Pharisees were fasting, some people asked Jesus, "Why is it that both the disciples of John and of the Pharisees fast, but yours do not?" Jesus answered, "How can the wedding guests fast while the bridegroom is with them? As long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot fast. But the day will come when the bridegroom will be taken from them and on that day they will

No one sews a piece of new cloth on an old cost, because the new parch will shrink and tear away from the old cloth, making a worse tear. And no one puts new wine into old wineskins, for the wine would burst the skins and then both the wine and the skins would be iost. But new wine, new skins!"

Commentary God is always seeking us out to draw us back to Him, to lead us and speak to our hearts. But we wander and do not respond. And still God wants to be intimate with us, bound to us in tove and mercy, in justice forever, so that we will know God. This is our true nature

Paul reminds us that we are God's love letters written in the Spirit for all to read. And Jesus tries in vain to teli us that we are the guests at a wedding feast with God. We are to live rejoicing, feasting on this intimacy with God. There will come a day when we must fast and we lose the presence of Jesus, but anni that day comes, there is a freshness and a life in the world that is new and holy.

We have this presence. Listen, eat, drink and Leftist Rep. Crispin Beltran, of the Anakpawis party-list group, and retired Philippine Constabulary chief Gen Ramon Montano were the first to feel the sting of Ms Arroyo's General Order No. 5 issued to the Armed Forces and the Philippine National Pouce directing them to suppress terrorism and lawless violence.

Satur escapes

Another police unit wanted to arrest Bayan Muna Rep. Satur Ocampo but narrowly missed him when they went to pick him up at the Sulo Hotel in Quezon City, where Ocampo and other congressmen were lambasting at a news conference Ms Arroyo's emergency proclamation.

Malacañang defended the arrests as part of ongoing efforts to go after eight to 10 people supposed y part of an unholy aluance of politicians, mintary adventurists and communist rebeis plotting to overthrow Ms Arroyo.

Arrest list to be expanded

Presidential Chief of Staff Michael Defensor said the wanted list could be expanded later.

PNP Director General Arturo Lomibao indicated that former Sen. Gregorio "Gringo" Honasan, who had been involved in severa, failed coup attempts in the late 1980s. was among the targets.

"Military posturing of any kind, for any reason, severely risks our position among the family of honorable nations, sets the country back in its business competitiveness, work availability, the unity of people and the value of its currency," Manua Archbishop Gaudencio Rosales said.

"At its worst, it is seen as the military grabbing the supremacy from the civilian," he said in his first Mass as a cardinal on the occasion of the 20th anniversary of People Power I at the Edsa Shrine.

Personal sacrifice

Rosales said the occasion should also remind "those in governance that the issues of leadership and corrupt transactions must be addressed with sincerity, transparency and with personal sacrifice "

While Filipinos crossed the boundary between tyranny and freedom 20 years ago, Rosales said the event could not be the "exclusive ownership of only the reformists, positicians, opportunusts, military, the poor and the middle class or of the Church."

Present at the noon Mass were former Presidents Aquino and Ramos and a handfur of Ms Arroyo's entics who also played roles in the first Edsa revolution.

The two leaders were joined at the Mass by former Vice President Teofisto Guingona, "Hyatt 10" members Corazon "Dinky" Soliman, Teresita "Ging" Deles, Florencio "Butch" Abad and Imelda Nicolas, former ambassadors to the Vancan Howard Dee and Henrietta de Villa, former Sen. The Provincial Board Members League of the Philippines led by its president, Vincent Piccio III, secretary general Santiago Cane Jr., and chairman Alian Zutueta said "The PBMLP is committed to stand by the President and recognizes her as the duty elected tegal and only President of the country until 2010. We are absolutely for the rule of law and are committed to abide by the provisions of the Philippine Constantion."

State has to defend itself

Oriental Mindoro Gov. Pebruary from $66.79 per barrel last month. MOPS-based diesel also fell to an average of $70.92 per barrel in the Reb. 1-23 period from the January average of $73.14 per barrel.

Energy Secretary Raphael Lotilla said world oil prices had started to ease this month after being on the uptrend the past several months due to the unrest in oil-producing country Nigerla and concerns about Iran's nuclear project.

"We have started to see some easing of world oil prices this month after (the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries') unanimous decision on Jan. 31 to maintain production in the second quarter," he said.

"In fact, international prices are now on a downtrend, an indication that will somehow provide some relief to oil importing countries like the Philippines," he added.

Shell, however, raised the price of its liquefied petroleum gas by 56 centavos a liter.

The international contract price of LPG had risen to a record high $625 50 per metric ton (MT) from $582 per MT in January.

Since the start of the year, gasoline, diesel and kerosene prices have only gone down twice by a total of P1 a liter, but have risen thrice by a total of P1.50 a liter.

LPG prices have risen four times by P2 17 centavos per kilogram or P23 87 per 11-kilogram cylinder.

GMA allies allow protests

DAVAO CITY - MAYOR RODRIgo Duterte of this city and Misamis Occidental Gov. Loreto Ocampos, both allies of President Macapagal-Arroyo, are defying the ban on protest demonstrations imposed by the President's proclamation of a state of national emergency last Friday.

"We live in a democracy," Duterte said, adding the city would allow protests for as long as they were not violent.

"The right to peaceful assembly must be observed and protected," he said.

Ocampos said he supported Ms Arroyo's proclamation but maintained that the right to dissent should not be curtailed "for as long as (protest actions) are conducted in an orderly and peaceful manner."

"The more we allow (people) to voice out their views, the more we let off political steam and diffuse tension," Ocampos told the INQUIRER.

Ocampos called on the province's police to be tolerant of the "people's expression of their political sentiments."

Labor group bats for more health care jobs in Japan

the Philippines yesterday called on the government to place on the backburner a bilatera, free trade agreement with Japan until Tokyo consented to granting Filipino workers "real and ready access" to Japan's sucrative health care labor market

The Japan-Philippines Economic Partnership Agreement should provide for a "demand-based" deployment of Filipino nurses and caregivers to Japan, not the quota-based system that Tokyo wants, according to TUCP general secretary Ernesto Herrera.

There is a huge pent-up demand for foreign health care workers in Japan due to its rapidly aging population. Government is duty-bound to secure for Pilipino workers the opportunity to meet this requirement." Her-

The Philippines wants the number to be demand-based, or as many as the market can accommodate.

Citing a study by Nomura Capital Management Inc., Herrera said the Japanese population was aging faster than that of any other country so that Japan would soon have only two able-bodied workers for every retiree.

Herrera said the remittances of Filipino workers in Japan had been going down because of the lingering aftereffects of the stricter employment rules for foreign entertainers earlier implemented by the Japanese government.

The former senator said Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas records showed home $356.66 million in 2005, up 16 percent from $308.12 million in 2004.

But the $356.66 million was still $133.78 million, or 27 percent, less than the $490.44 million that they remutted in 2002, just before the stiff hiring rules for foreign entertainers were announced, Herrera pointed out.

He added that the $133.78 million, or P7.3 billion, difference meant a lot of lost income that otherwise would have sustained hundreds of thousands of poor families.

The $356.66 million was even less than the $370.09 million that Filipino workers in Japan remitted in 2000.

in contrast, the remittances from Hong Kong-based Filipino workers soared 130 percent over the past five years, from $146.84 million in 2000 to $338.90 million in 2005, Herrera said.

Floods hampering Central Luzon rehab from Mt. Pinatubo eruptions

By Tonette Orejas PDI Central Luzon Desk

CITY OF SAN PERNANDO-THE REBUILDing of Central Luzon after the devastation wrought by Mt. Pinatubo's eruptions and lahar flows in 1991 was "far from finished," an official of the Japan Bank for International Cooperation has said.

Osamu Murata, the chief representative of JBIC in the Philippines, cited floods in the region as a "critical" problem.

Murata said the JBIC "remains steadfast in our commitment to finish the challenging job that we have started and we will be with you until the task of recovering from the ashes of the Pinarubo eruption is finally completed." "In this sense, it is urgently necessary for the DPWH (Department of Public Works and Highways) and loca, executives to revisit the Japan International Cooperation (-funded) master plan and identify and establish the priority of the remanning projects [there] in order to complete the recovery of the areas," he said in a speech during a recent workshop on the Pinarubo hazards urgent mittgation projects (PHUMP)

Murata said the JBIC had extended loans totaling 15.924 billion yen to two PHUMP phases.

Gil Viilanueva, chief of the DPWH's Pinatubo Mount emergency project management office, said under Phase I. dikes were built on the Sacobia-Bamban River basin in Tar.ac, the Manila North Road portion there rehabilitated was and the Mabalacat-Bamban bridge was repaired, all at a total cost of P2.8 bulton

Under Phase 2, which was focused on the Pasig-Potrero River basin in Pampanga, the southwest portion of the FVR megadike was repaired and raised, the Baluyot channel was improved, the San Pernando-Santo Tomas-Minalin tail dike was fortified, the pilot channel of the Third River was dredged and the Mancatian bridge and access roads to and from Angeles City and Porac town were rebuilt. The projects cost a total of P4.5 billion.

The engineering interventions duced the risks from lahar rampages and floods and restored the transportation network in the reglon, Vilianueva said.

Oversight agencies such as the National Economic and Development Authority are studying the PHUMP's Phase 3 before this is endorsed to the JBIC. Under this phase, flood control work will be carried out at the Pasac Delta and the Porac-Gumain River in southern Pampanga where the Pampanga River drains to Manifa Bay.

The Export-Import Bank of Korea is also being tapped to fund some components of the Villanueva said the rehabilitation efforts cover an area of 4,900 square meters that were affected by the 1991 eruptions and succeeding lahar or volcanic mudflows.

The Pinatubo rehabilitation plan has so far been the most extensively funded disaster response program of the government.

The defunct Mount Pinatubo Commission had spent over P30 billion in assistance. The United States Agency for International Development alone funneled $42 milion to the re-

LONDON—BRITISH POLICE SAID FRIDAY they had recovered part of the money stolen in what may be Britain's biggest bank robbery but released three suspects arrested in connection with the theft.

Investigators found "a quantity of cash" in a van, the officer in charge of the investigation Commissioner Adrian Leppard said, adding that the amount found has not yet been determined

Television pictures showed police officers re moving several apparently heavy black plasts

Police are keeping the three released suspects under observation. They earlier issued an iden tikit portrait of one of the robbers, a tall man with freekles and a ginger beard which Leppard said may have been fake.

The theft Thursday from a cash depot in Ton bridge, southeast of London, is believed to have netted up to 50 million pounds ($87.5 million).

A 41-year-old woman was questioned on suspicion of handling stolen goods after she was detained Thursday trying to bank a wad of banknotes at a building society (credit union) in south London.

"This woman went into the Portman Building Society in Bromley and had cash with her which she was banking and it had Tonbridge markings on it," Kent Police assistant chief constable Adri an Leppard said.

want to stress something to you: This woman could be completely innocent. But it was an obvious action by the building society and the Metropolitan Police (in London) at that time and we are active in the investigation."

Two other people—a 29-year-old man and a 31-year-old woman-were arrested Thursday in connection with Tuesday's audacious armed raid on the Securitas cash depot in Tonbridge, southeast of London.

"We have got professional gangsters that we need to carch," Leppard said, stressing that sev eral lines of inquiry have been opened. "We are going to bring these people to book."

Police said a Volvo sedan thought to have been used in the heist had been found-on fire-late Thursday in Leeds village in Kent They have recovered four other vehicles, all of which are being combed for any forensic cities.

Detectives were still hunting for the white Renault truck used by the robbers to transport the cash-both new and used banknotes-from

Police have confirmed that 25 million pounds has been stolen, but Leppard has said that continuing investigations might put the figure "as high as 40 million, or even 50 million."

He urged people with any information to contact police, reminding them of the two mil lion pound reward on offer

Bird flu claims 20th victim in Indonesia its 20th human victim in Indone- hood. sia, a 27 year-old woman, according to tests by the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta, an Indonesian health ministry official said on Saturday.

The announcement came a day after the country launched house to-house checks on poultry in Jakarta, where 600 fowl have been culled in a bid to halt the spread of the avian flu.

"We have received the test result from CDC Arlanta. Yulia (the victim) was positive," said Hariadi Wibisono, director general of control of animal-borne disease at the health ministry.

The 27-year-old woman died last Monday after being admitted to the Sullanti Saroso hospital in Jakarta, which is designated to treat patients showing bird flu symptoms.

Local tests are not considered definitive. The CDC laboratory tests are among those recognized by the World Health Organiza-

JAKARDA-BIRD PLU HAS KILLED dead chickens in her neighbor-

Of Indonesia's confirmed fatalities from the H5N1 virus, nine have been in 2006, making litdonesia the country with the most burd flu deaths so far this year.

So far most victims of bird flu globally have had direct or indirect contact with chickens, but there are fears the virus will mutate into a strain easily passed among people, causing a pandemic in which milhons could die.

More than 90 people have been killed because of the virus world-

The highly pathogenic strain of bird flu has affected birds in about Indonesia's two-thirds

Adnan Ahmad, a senior city official, said the 600 fowl were slaughtered and burnt at various locations in Jakarta where keeping backyard chickens is a norm among the 12 million citizens and a mouster has said reporting of new cases among fowl, which in turn could lead to more human cases, is not as efficient as it

"So far the residents have been quite responsive in the campaign. There is no resentment from the people when we have to cull their chickens," Adnan said.

Agriculture officials estimate that Jakarta has some 500,000

As part of the prevention drive, hundreds of inspectors continued on Saturday to scour the sprawling capital and spray disinfectant in bird cages and chicken coops.

Controlling the virus is a huge, if not impossible, task in Indonesia, an archipelago of about 17,000 islands and 220 million

The government has resisted the mass culling of fowl seen in some other nations, citing the expense and the impracticality in a country where the keeping of a few chickens or ducks in backyards of homes is widely practiced in ones as well as the countryside.

Agencies have concentrated instead on selective culling, and on public education and hygiene measures aimed at prevention.

Curfew halts Iraq bloodshed

BAGHDAD-A CURFEW IN BAGHDAD and calls for Muslim unity at Friday prayers across trao eased sectarian violence that has raised fears of civil war but, armid clashes after dark, police banned cars from the roads for another day.

Gunmen, some firing rockets, attacked Summi mosques in two Baghdad districts, including the Sunrus' revered Abu Hanifa shrine, police said, adding that police and lraquitroops repelied assailants who wore the black of Shifte militias.

Casualties would add to the 200 dead in Baghdad alone since reprisals against minonty Sunn, mosques began with a suspected al-Qaida bombing of a Shiite shrine on Wednesday pitching Iraq into its worst crisis since the US invasion of 2003.

"This is a moment of choosing for the Iraqi people," said President George W. Bush, who hopes an end to violence can let him bring US troops home. "The coming days will be intense."

"Sunni and Shiite clenes and political leaders have made great efforts and the situation is better," a serior Shifte politician said. "But .. Iraq is still in the danger zone."

Officials said the daylight curfew, imposed on Finday and largely successful in staunching sectarian bloodshed during the day, would now last for vehicles until 4 p.m. on Saturday.

Commanders said a US rapid reaction Reuters force was in position.

Picasso, Monet, Dali and Matisse paintings stolen from Rio museum

RIO DE JANEIRO-GUNMEN robbed a R.o de Janeiro art museum Friday of their most valuable paintings including a Picasso, Matisse, Monet and Dali, the Chacara do Ceu museum director said.

Alencar said the paintings were the most valuable in the museum's collection and included Pablo Picasso's "The Dance" and a book by him titled "Toros," Claude Monet's "Marine," Henri Mansse's "Garden of Luxembourg" and Salvador Dali's "Two

She said the robbers knew ex-

There was no immediate estimate made of the value of the stolen paintings.

The gunmen forced museum staff to disconnect the alarm and camera system before the heist, then disappeared into the vast crowd of carnival goers outside as they fled.

Embracing Edsa

WENTY YEARS IS ENOUGH TIME TO AFFORD one an objective vantage point from which to evaluate the significance, or lack of one, of a historical guidepost. But instead of objective and discerning assessments of the gains and losses of the 1986 revolution, the nation is getting a mudslide, much like the one that buried tragically a town in Southern Leyte, of recrimination, acrimony and revisionism.

Worse, perhaps, the nation is sliding into historical amnesia that not only exonerates the corrupters and oppressors of the past, but endows them with a ritual aura that somehow results in an exaltation of the period before the revolution, romanticizing it to the point that everything that came after it seemed like paradise lost. The implication here is that 20 years after Edsa, with all its squandered opportunities and dashed hopes, there has suddenly emerged a justification for the obliteration not only of the legacy of the revolution, but of people power itself. A nation of lotus eaters seems bent on romanticizing the nostalgia of dictatorship, and the fascists and crooks of the past seem to be in a unique position to regain paradise for themselves.

It does not help, of course, that the administration of President Macapagal-Arroyo, itself the beneficiary of the Edsa legacy, is beleaguered by questions of legitimacy so that it merely risks undermining itself by a proper celebration of the revolution. Confronted with a challenge by dissident military men and their civilian cooperators who are infected with the virus of military adventurism engendered by the Marcos dictatorship, the President is hardly in a position to summon people power to shield the democratic regime. With the legitimacy of her presidency m question, she does not have the moral ascendancy to invoke people power and defend the constitutional order.

But we should resist any attack on the democratic and constitutional order. We should be reminded what Edsa was all about, and why keeping its memory alive is important. Edsa was a fight against tyranny, a struggle between good and evil. Filipinos who lived through the terrible years of the Marcos dictatorship know that Edsa was nothing short of a holy war. It was nothing short of a battle between light and darkness.

If Edsa is sometimes painted in terms of a miracle, it is not only because its victory was astounding. It was a victory against all odds. It was something totally unexpected because it violated all natural laws of reason and human calculation It was a preternatural event.

If there are detractors of Edsa, they are those who protest its preternatural dimensions. The Marcos loyalists and many in the Left demean it as totally explicable, trac ing its success to American interference and even machinations by the US Central Intelligence Agency. These were the same people who had insisted that Marcos was invincible and irremovable precisely because of American sponsorship and support. When the outcome flew in their face, they had to insist that the Americans had switched sides, in effect demeaning the people who went against Marcos' troops and tanks with nothing but a prayer and a hope that they would prevail with God's help.

There is, then, a dismissive attitude of democracy and the people among detractors of the Edsa revolution. It is a dangerous attitude because it carries within it the seeds of fascism. It is an anti-democratic attitude

Edsa was a democratic revolution. It was a historic event because it reaffirmed the power and authority of the people to control and meet their destiny. If we hark back to the memory of Edsa, it is because we hark back to that singular moment of history in which we drew forth from the power of our solidarity and used that power to change things for the better

Edsa's validity and power derive exactly from its memory. We hold this memory dear in the midst of so much disappointment and frustration. This memory is potent as shown by the other countries that followed its example in order to spark their own people power revolutions. Edsa signaled a democratic transition not only in the nation but also in other nations with repressive regimes. It unleashed the pro-democracy tide that swept South Korea, Poland, Hungary, Germany and the rest of the world

The spirit of Edsa is not dead. It lives on. If not for it, we would have no vantage point from which to evaluate our democratic progress, how much we have achieved and how much we have fallen short of the ideal. Edsa remains a barometer of all of our noblest aspirations as a people. Edsa is an ideal and a hope we should continue to embrace.

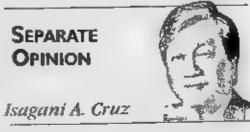

The melted mountain

IT WAS ENCREDIBLE EVEN AS AN IMAGINAtive horror story. A mountain suddenly melted into a muddy flood that descended mightily into a sleepy town below like an angry wave that could not be resisted or appeased. There was no warning, like thunder in the skies or torrential rains from the numbus clouds. First it was there as a centuries-old part of the natural scenery, so familiar and taken for granted by the people in Southern Leyte. Then it had turned into a terrible monster from the bowels of the earth to claim the lives of unwary and innocent victims, including little children.

The staggering story filled the nation with shock and bewilderment, and, especially, compassion for the dead and the families they had loved and left. How and why did the tragedy happen? Was it a punishment from Heaven like the destruction of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah for their sinfulness? Was the town notorious for its wickedness as a hideout of drug traffickers or murderers or looters or the refuge of fugitives from the law they had ravished and floured? No, it was not; it certainly was no haven for criminality and vice. It was a peaceful and God-fearing community of simple folk who earned their living through their honest efforts from the bounty of the soil and

For once, the politicians could not be blamed for the disaster. It could not be said that the businessmen and other carpetbaggers they were protecting had denuded the mountains and permitted the rains to mundate the lives and properties of the people in the lowland village. Neither has the calamity been imputed to the carelessness or neglect, even graft, of the government officials. Like the rest of the residents in the area, they did not apprehend any danger from the quiet mountain that looked so serene and unthreat ening, like an old and companionable landmark. The accident caught everyone unaware and disproved the poetic saying that a mounrain is firm and immovable amidst the strife of

The Department of Environment and Natu ral Resources gave the scientific reason for the catastrophe. It said that "the excessive rainfall during the past two weeks... saturated the hillside and the loose ground eventually gave way, causing the landslide." Even the technicians in the government could not anneipate the accident, much less the simple people many of whom still lie lost in their muddy graves. It was what is known in law as domnum absque injurio or a wrong that is not legally redressible.

It is small comfort, but still deeply appreciated for its sincerity and generosity, that the nation opened its heart and hands to console the survivors who must now renew their lives without their loved and lost-spouses, children, siblings and other close relatives-who had become unguarded preys of the angry mountain. No less gratefully acknowledged is the kindness of our sister states that have manifested their sympathy in material help and words of condolence. The Holy Pather also of fered prayers for the victims of the holocaust and their admission to the many mansions of eventual recovery from "the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune that flesh is heir to." Misfortune, like festive occasions such as marriage and reconciliation, is a great unifier This was touchingly displayed in the cruelty of that sudden landslide when Filipinos from all walks of life, of different faiths and social status, men and women and minors too, teenagers and even little children, gave gentle assistance to the distressed, recited simple prayers for them and voiced consoling words to make the tragedy less painful and more

It is said that "God works in mysterious ways His wonders to perform," but one may still ask, without irreverence, why the victims of the tragedy had to be the inoffensive men and women, and even small children, who had pursued the "even tenor of their lives" in their qu. et little village that had not known the sophistication and the hedonism of big and extravagant cities. Yet they are not alone. Millions have been killed in the wars that have devastated the world, in outbreaks of disease that even modern science has not controlled, in the concentration camps and gulags where martyrs have died for defying dictators—all of these innocent and inoffensive people have given up their lives on the unbiased scafford of sacrifice

And so it was with the hundreds and perhaps thousands of people who have perished in the buried barangay, many to remain unknown except in sorrowful remembrance of the kin they have left behind. The question persists like a perplexed accusation: Did they deserve their sodden fate? The question may be answered with the divine reminder that death is the golden key that opens the portals it is times like these that bring the people of eternity" and makes the grieved departed, unlike us the hving, blessed and finally at

New wine

THERE IS A STORY ABOUT A MAN WHO swallowed a live mosquito. What did he do to kill it? First, he took a mosquito coil (ketol) and ate it, then he drank the insecticide to

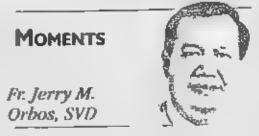

In today's Gospel (Mk. 2, 18-22), Jesus chides the Pharisees for their narrow-minded and absurd insistence on law and traditions, and for their refusal to pour new wine into new wineskins. We need new wine and new wineskins, a new way of looking at things, and we must not be afraid to venture into new ways of loving and serving.

For those who insist on keeping and preserving old wine, better make sure that what you are keeping is good wine, not spoiled wine. Worse, if you are preserving vinegar.

in the name of law and order, a lot of people can be served. But also, in the name of law and order, a lot of things have been stified. In connection with our story above, do our people need to eat mosquito coil or drink insecticide to kill a mosquito swallowed alive?

There is a lot of fermentation going around us again these days. It means that we, as a people, have not lost the spirit of Edsa. It is said though that there are people who insist on taking us back to pre-Edsa. I hope they realize that there can be no going back. Never again! Tak. Tsk. Some people never learn. No matter how some people try, there is no way to stop the fermentation of new wine.

We take time today to thank and remember the many countless people who have been crushed and trampled upon in the process of making new wine. And we take time today not only to pray but also to admonish and warn those who have crushed and continue to crush them. To them, we echo the message of Ash Wednesday (March 1 this year): "Remember, you are dust, and to dust you will return."

"Repent and believe in the Gospel." The Lenten season should remind us not only of the dos and don'ts; it should also usher us into new ways of living God's message to the fullest. Yes, it is time for new wine, full of spirit and explosiveness. It is the season of hope, with the promise that resurrection is sure to come for those who go through passion and death. Yes, there is victory in the end. Justice will triumph. Goodness will prevail, Democracy will not end.

Speaking of new wine, allow me to acknowledge a confrere, Fr. Ewald Dinter, SVD who sent us a donation of P3,000 for our Filiplno Missionaries abroad. What makes it touching and significant is that the amount came from our Mangyan brothers and sisters from Mindoro. This offering from the heart, "a widow's mite," so to say, is a beautiful reminder that all of us, big or small can contribute to the fermentation of new wine.

On a personal note, I always carry with me in my car the oil for the anounting of the sick, just in case. I cannot count now the times in the past when I stopped to bless and anoint people, especially those involved in accidents. Last Thursday, Reb. 23, about 7:30 p.m. while driving through Aurora Boulevard, Cubao, I stopped to anomit two alleged holdup men who were just gunned down by the police. It was not only a stomach-churning but also a Amen heart-breaking moment to see how life has become so cheap these days. But the challenge is there: We must bring God, we must put the new wine in the most unexpected, and espe cially in the most unwanted, places of our

An old friend, lawyer Gregorio "Tito" Imperial just passed away. I remember him because he and my father were together in the UP Law days before the war. I especially remember him as someone who used to walk on our grounds here at Christ the King Seminary with a rosary in hand. May he remind us that we need to hold the hands of our Mother Mary as we walk on as a people and as a nation. She was with us in Edsa L. She is with us especially again at this point in

Let the season of Lent remind us all that life is just lent to us. We are all just passing by. No one is unchangeable and no one is indispensable in this world. We are not immigrants here, We are all pilgrims and travelers on the road.

"Did I fill the world with love?" Sooner or later, all of us will leave this world. That's the way it is. None of us will leave this world alive. We carry nothing with us when we die, but we can leave a lot of things behind. We can leave behind vinegar, or new wine.

Speaking of leaders, by all standards, Jesus was not "qualified" as a leader because: He had no degree (and yet they called Him teacher); He had no servants (and yet they called Him master); He had no medicines (and yet they called Him healer); He had no army (and yet He remains in power). Amen.

A moment with the Lord:

Lord, remind me that when there is crushing and fermenting, there is new wine in the making.

tive editor for Asia Anthony Spaeth, who has written many articles on the Philippines in the pest, makes some observations about People Power: "In 1986, Filipinos spontaneously invented a potent political tool that has freed tens of millions of people oppressed by their rulers. But twenty years on, the phenomenon of People Power looks good just about everywhere but the place of its birth ... Coup attempts by disgrunded officers and soldiers are a chronic problem. Corruption never subsided and though the Philippines is one of the best educated countries in Asia-92% of Pilipinos are literate—the economy has never nisen to Asian Tiger status."

IN TIME MAGAZINE'S LATEST ISSUE, EXECU-

Perhaps, the events of the past few days bave sounded the death knell for that Filipino "invention." it may still be too early to make a clear asressment of recent events, but what is obvious is that in the Philippine context, for a people power movement to succeed, three elements are needed: a critical mass on the streets, withdrawal of support by key military elements and active participation by senior church officials. All three were present in Edsa I and II; all were missing during last Friday's drama. Government security forces, both police and military, were able to deploy their units and prevent the fusion of different anti-Arroyo forces into the critical mass needed for success. There was no withdrawal of support by military units with the chain of command remaining intact. Most important of all, there was no towering figure like a Cardinal Sin to mobilize church participation. This is not to say that the situation has returned to normal. Unrest in the military will continue even as the political opposition girds up for another impeachment battle.

Acrually, I had prepared a second part for my last article on the life and times of the Class of 1956 and I would like to close out my golden jubilee notes on the subject.

I mentioned last week that on April 4, 1956, our graduation day from the PMA, the headline of

I PROMISED MYSELF YEARS AGO THAT I would no longer write about you each time the Edsa anniversary rolled round. You have your own life to live, after all, and living is hard enough without having to carry the burden of symbolism and serving as a metaphor for the country. I'll spare you that

But this is the 20th anniversary of Edsa, and as the events of the previous days show, the continuing drama of our nation's search for real freedom and democracy is still a movie-in-the-making, even if the cast keeps thanging. And in my mind, in the personal film that your father and I keep of those four days on Edsa, you play a central role

Shortly after you were born, on Feb. 26, 1986, I wrote in an article that, of all the souvenirs that Pilipinos have taken away from those glorious events, I ended up with the best souventr of all: "A young woman who will live the life we have won for her, and who, as she strikes out in directions we, her parents, can only now guess at, reminds us of everything that we have gained."

You will always be our Edsa baby. "Mom, I hate if that people will always know my age," you said a few days ago in mock dismay. The country and the world are not about to let you forget the meaning of your date of birth. But it is up to you to give meaning to the life we have given you.

my womb. On the morning of Feb. 23, a Sunday, hearing the call for food for the soldiers holed up in Camp Aguinaldo, your dad and I prepared sandwiches made from queso de bola left over from Christmas, drove to Santolan and threw over the bags of sandwiches to soldiers' eager hands. Then we approached a small group of women who seemed to be in charge and asked what we could do to help. *Please, just go home and rest," one of them said, "we don't want to be responsible for whatever happens to you here."

We were putting out daily editions of Verltas by then, and so I proceeded to the office while your dad, as he would in the next few days, rubbernecked among the crowds, witnessing first-hand, as he breathlessly related to me, colonial period. It is not to say they were democratic in any real sense, for indeed they were very much loaded in favor of the elite. But in the sense that they were relatively insulated from politics,

Marcos changed the rules of the game in 1972 when he seized upon the martial law provision of the Constitution to Install one-man rule under an indefinite state of emergency. One of the objectives of the martial law proclamation was "to exurpate the roots of the insurgency"—a goal large enough to encompass a wide range of interventions. Marcos intervened in the work of an ongoing constitutional convention, jailed some of its members, and dictated its final product. Under this new Constitution, he legalized the exercise of authoritarian powers. By closing its eyes to the illegal manner by which the 1973 Constitution was ratified, the Supreme Court became one of the Members of the class were moving up to the rank of lieutenant colonel, and after the declaration of martial law, they occupied key positions in the military and civilian bureaucracy. The Edsa Revolution would find classmates on different sides of the conflict, but the spirit of friendship and camaraderie nurtured through the years since April 1, 1952 kept the class intact

On April 4, 1986, the Incorner headline was "Ongpin admits links with Kokoy." Finance Minister Jaime Ongpin had disclosed the day before that for 12 years, until he joined the Cory Aquino

On the same day, the class, with some exceptions, was officially retired after serving 30 years in the military service. Today, the law provides for the compulsory retirement of an officer upon reaching the age of 56, regardless of his years of service. Of the surviving 41 members of the class, 30 would become flag officers, a batting average of better than 50 percent.

One last word. At the homecoming festivities last week at Port Del Pilar honoring the golden and silver jubilarians (Class of 1981), Karina David, chair of the Civil Service Commission, was the guest of honor and speaker. One of the few civilian personalities invited to address the corps of cadets while assembled on the parade ground of Fort Del Pilar, Karma led the different classes in trooping the line, keeping to the martial beat like a real trouper. She was also the guest speaker during the PMA alumni convention held last January at Camp Agumaldo.

in her talk before the alumni, Karina made some interesting observations about the AFP-interesting for those in uniform: "AFP stands for looking at the institution in Awe, in Fear of our very Protectors. in awe, because when we look from the outside, when we look at the military establishment, we can see you as a mysterious group of people best in discipline, able to take on pain, very authoritarian, very hierarchical, patriotic, giving up your lives for the country-wow! But there is also fear . . . whether you like it or not, fear sets in our minds by the mere fact that people are in uniform and have a monopoly of the legal means of violence. When people know that it is led by a small group of men and women like you, bound together by personal loyalties that have been forged in an environment like the PMA-which is an environment like no other--fear sets in."

the Philippines.

THEY SAY EDSA IS DEAD. THE PEDESTAL HAS COLLAPSED, leaving one more casualty of the Philippine circus. The promise of People Power, Cory Aquino's jubilant announcement of "freedom from 20 years of oppression, hardship, repression, injustice, corruption, greed, waste and near-despair" has never seemed as impossible as it now seems.

What happened after People Power 1986? Coup attempt after coup attempt,

Today, 20 years Patricia later, another wom-Evangelista an president, placed in office by People Power, is fending off assaults on her legitimacy. The country has just been declared in a state of emergency, and I have just witnessed one of my academic idols being hauled off to jail.

I don't have the ascendancy to judge the state of affairs. I'm one of those college kids who shrieked ecstatically when classes were called off last Friday, happily assuming it was because the President wanted to celebrate the 1986 revolution instead of seeing it as a sign of greater evils to come

But while the country languishes under a state of emergency, many are pointing a finger at what started it all, the revolution of 1986. They say it was a faction of the elite overthrowing another faction of the elite; a useless, pointless exercise that led nowhere -except that it left a legacy that has regularly upset the rule of law.

I was 5 months old when people pushed back tunks in Edsa. My generation grew up with the magic, the lore and the mythology of the peaceful revolution. Fidel Ramos, Juan Ponce Enrile and Corazon Aquino were my heroes. June Kerthley was the person I wanted to grow up into. The Americans have their Statue of Liberty, the French have their art, and, by God, we had Edsa!

For 14 years, Marcos and his martial law ruled the Philippines. What used to be called the freest press in Southeast Asia fell silent. People were picked up off the streets without warning, and the means for torture ranged from sexual molestation to strangulation. Congress was aboushed, a curfew implemented and the right to strike removed. What opposition still remained languished in jail cells or lived in exile.

Back then, an American senator reportedly commented, The Philippines is a nation of 60 million cowards and one

Then Ninoy Aquino was assassinated. A man was suddenly made a martyr before the eyes of a disbelieving world Snap elections were called three years later and, as expected, colossal cheating took place all over the country. One poll watcher was found dead with a bloodled Namfrel handbook

Then on Feb. 21, 1986, a critical mass from the "60 million cowards" gathered in Edsa. Some were trembling in fear, others stoic, and hundreds more singing, praying, and offer-

The People Power Apocalypse, as Nick Joaquin called the four days of Edsa, was more than just the peaceful overthrow of a tyrannical leader. It was a milestone in the history of a nation when its citizens collectively decided according to their own will and conscience that they have had enough. And the world watched in wonder. According to Han Sung-Joo of the Asiatic Research Center, "As never before, people throughout the world became passionately involved in the hour-by-hour development of events in a faraway political country."

For a stunning moment, the essential impulse stood up for all to marvel at," said Time Magazine. "There before your eyes a thought became a decision became a deed, with no other impetus than that a people realized they had a claim on their own souls."

They say Edsa did nothing for us. I disagree. I'm sitting in front of my computer, gleefully pounding out a column that will never be censored because the generation before me made sure I had that right. When the Randy Davids and Waiden Bellos of the world are thrown in jail, we can demand to know why. But those are just the "at leasts."

The country is in turmoil, the government is in chaos, and thousands are leaving for better chances. We messed up big time, and we have no one to blame but ourselves. Many things have not changed since 1986. Many more have gotten worse. The Philippines was given a wonderful chance to turn itself around, and it didn't. But the incompetence of the country's leaders and the failure of the cutizens to be a vanguard against a new evil can't take away the triumph that was Edsa 1986.

We celebrate Edsa, not because of what happened to the Philippines after, but because of what happened during those four days in February 1986. It is a fairy tale of mainmoth proportions: a ruthless dictator vanguished by a longafraid, long-oppressed people wielding only flowers, rosaries and red lunch boxes. Because of Edsa, as this newspaper put it in 1986, "Every Filipino in the world today stands a little taller and a little prouder."

People power in 1986 inspired millions of other oppressed peoples the world over to take their future in their bands. In South Korea, thousands of citizens stormed the streets to throw our their own Marcos. Pakistan, Nepal, Bangladesh and Indonesia followed suit. We had our Yellow Revolution, Ultraine had its Orange, Georgia had its Rose, Kyrgyzstan its Tulip, and Lebanon its Cedar Revolution. The Czechs overthrew Milnsevic. No matter what happens, that will not change.

I was too young to be in Edsa, but I'm old enough to accept reality without being disillusioned. As Krip Yuson said in his prologue to the spectacular new book "Heroes," the story of Edsa can "awaken the youth, alert them to possibilities of heroism for honor, country and freedom."

I'm awake, and I'm still proud.

Dear Edsa baby

the confrontation between the people and the tanks at the corner of Edsa and Ortigas. Ironcally, even while I was supposed to be "safe" in our office on Panay Avenue, I would be among those subjected to tear gas, which seeped through the vents during the "battle" for the takeover of PTV-4 nearby.

On the evening of Feb. 25, hearing news that the Marcoses had fled Malacañang, your dad and I drove over to Sta. Mesa, parking the car at the foot of the bridge and walking to the Palace, waving at euphoric crowds and exchanging greetings of "Happy New Year!"
"Happy Birthday!" because there were shaply no words to express our jubilation. You were born the morning after, and everyone who came to visit was beaming at your wonderful sense of timing.

YOU were at Edsa, albeit still carried around in I WONDER sometimes what sort of life "we have won for you." How would you, and people of your generation, judge us and our efforts at making the promise come true? Especially given the events of the past two days and the "national emergency" we're confronted with, I feel like such a failure. We had been at Edsa, and at so many demonstrations and rallies before and after, to win for you and for your knya a life of vaster dimensions and endless possibilities. But the future for you seems even more circumscribed than the one we faced as college students so many years ago.

I remember, for one, graduating from college and being filled with confidence about the future I was apprehensive about finding work I enjoyed and which paid well, but I was sure I would find a job, one way or the other. But today, I sense such despair and hopelessness among your cohort, and such desperation about finding work. So many of you are choosing to find employment abroad-which was only a final option for many of us—and giving up on ever finding fulfillment here, among your people, decrying not just the poverty but more so the corruption and cynicism. How many of those among you still believing in our country, watched the unfolding events and have just decided to throw in the towel and pursue the foreign option?

HOW have you turned out, my Edsa baby?

In many ways, you embody your generation. From your stories, and your indignant reactions to the more polemic among your teachers and student leaders at the state university, you have a visceral dislike for anyone, including your parents, telling you what you should think and feel. You are cynical about all sorts of isms, and harbor doubts about moral certainties and inflexible ideologies.

Being a debater, you choose to believe instead in "matter," in facts and statistics, in reasoned analysis and in arguing your way to a resolution. I once told you that "matter" should be sought as a way to understand the world, not just to win an argu that you never take our word for it, that you would rather ferret out the facts and arrive at your own conclusions.

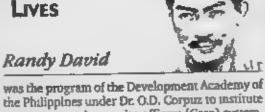

But I also sense a deep romantic streak, one nurtured from the books you have read, the stories you have heard, the movies you have watched, and which we have stored on DVDs, the better to watch over and over when the

Last Friday, hearing I was on my way to Ayala for the huge rally led by Tita Cory, you texted me: "People are getting arrested na. If you're going to the rally, please be careful." I noted with dismay how it was now my child issuing warnings, in place of my parents and husband. But I also recognized that while joining protests was my way of living up to my generation's challenges, you had found your own way to live up to yours, and that I should just the Philippines under Dr. O.D. Corpuz to institute a career executive service officers (Ceso) system. The Ceso aimed to produce a generation of modern professional civil servants and public managers that could be deployed to the different agencies of government.

These inimatives, however, were not strong enough to arrest the growing dysfunctionality of an over-centralized system. The politicization of the military was perhaps one of the more dangerous outcomes of the Marcos experiment. Marcos came to depend almost exclusively on his loyalist generals to stay in power. This did not sit well with the young officer corps who became increasingly resentful, and eventually mounted a coup against the regime.

Were it not for the accident of people power, the Marcos regime would likely have been replaced by a provisional military-civilian junta. People power made it possible for Cory in 1986 to re-establish a purely civilian government based on the configurations of the pre-martial law political system. Starting out on a maximum agenda almed at reversing the effects of 14 years of authoritarian rule, the first Edsa government unfortunately found itself retreating by the day from its original intentions. It sought to rebuild political institutions but ended up restoring an obsolete political system based on patronage and corruption. But even so, many vital institutions like the Commission on Elections and the judiciary were able to regain their autonomy and credibility during this period.

Joseph Estrada, an outsider to the Edsa constituency, ironically became the first beneficiary of a reformed electoral process. Carried on the wings of a massive populist vote, Erap came to the presidency in 1998 with all the right ideas about modern governance. But the logic of a political system run on patronage proved irresistible. He was eventually unseated in 2001.

Edsa II placed the Supreme Court once more on the spot. The Court liberally inverpreted the Constitution to legitimize Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo's accession to the presidency. I believe that single act compromised its autonomy. It set the parameters for its subsequent rulings on questions affecting Ms Arroyo's political standing.

The greater blame for the destruction of our institutions must, however, be laid at Ms Arroyo's door. In opring to secure a full six-year term in the 2004 presidential election, she compounded the problems of legitimacy arising from Edsa II. She found herself exploiting the weaknesses of the electoral process in the hope that the moral majority would understand and close its eyes to her "lapses." She juggled public funds and exploited the accounting system of various agencies to finance her campaign. But more than this, she abused the prerogatives of her office by enlisting the military to support her political ambitions, and then openly rewarding those who helped her. In less than five years, Ms Arroyo has wrecked the whole institutional healing process that was set in motion in 1986.

At 9 a.m., on Feb. 24, 1986, 20 years ago, Marcos went live on Channel 4, surrounded by his generals, to announce a nationwide state of emergency. How uncanny that Ms Arroyo should choose the same date to announce the same draconian measure to suppress the same perceived conspiracy supposedly between the extreme Left and the extreme Right. Marx was indeed right: "Events and personages occur at least twice in history—the first time as tragedy, the second time as farce."

'It was a convergence of various forces'

By Jose Maria Sison

T IS FACTUALLY WRONG AND UNhistorical to airbrush from the socalled Edsa I the two reality levels of what is loosely called Left: the protracted people's war led by the Communist Party of the Philippines (you may call it the underground Left) and the legal patriotic and progressive forces (the legal Left) of the national democratic movement best represented by the Bagong Alyansang Makebayan (Bayan)

You cannot deny that the Left, especially the armed revolutionary movement, had consistently fought the Marcos fascist dic-tatorship since long before the US, the Catholic hierarchy and the Enrile-Ramos-RAM candem decided to junk Marcos in the wake of the Agumo assassination that paved the way for the presidential candidacy of Corazon Aquino. The US and most of the local reactionary forces supported Marcos for a long time and decided to get rid of him only when they feared that the people, the Left and even a substantial part of the Aguino electoral following would move together in a direction threatening to the life of the entire ruing system.

Tactical error

You must take into account the longferm importance of the Left in the struggle against the Marcos autocracy. The boycott policy of the CPP was a tartical error for the duration of the presidential e ectoral campaign in 1986 because ft separated the CPP-led masses from the bigger masses that attended the pro-Aquino electoral ralbes. An informal alhance with Aquino could still be maintained even as she had come under the advice of the US (specifically Richard Hojbrooke and the CIA station chief) in November 1985 to keep the Left out of her campaign organization and even as she had snubbed all approaches of Bayan for a formal alliance after her meeting with Holbrooke

You must distinguish the boycott policy from the decision of the CPP to call for the immediate overthrow of the Marcos lascist regime after the snap election in which Marcos won by Comelec count and by Barasang Pambansa proclamation, as the CPP had predicted. The CPP decision to call for the overthrow of Marcos because of electoral fraud came ahead of Aquino's call for civil disobedience and the pastoral letter of the Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines denouncing the Marcos regime as illegitimate and immoral The CPP contributed immensely to the success of the mass oprisings at Edsa and elsewhere by calling on the masses in the rural and orban masses to participate and by asking allied forces to do their best The CPP was not at all permanently disabled by its previous boycott policy and by the failure of the leadership to see clearly before and during the electoral compaign that the US had pushed Marcos to call for map election so that he would subsequently be overthrown for electoral cheating, as in the earlier case of Duvalier

Bayan was decisive in rallying its organized masses immediately to the front of lactann Cubao upon the call of Butz Aquino for help. It constituted the hard core of the masses (at least 20 percent of the entire masses) at Edsa at the peak Five hundred members of Bayan Quezon City accompanied Col. Santiago to capture the TV Channel 4 compound. After the transfer of Enrile, Ramos and RAM from Camp Agumaldo to Camp Crame, Bayan chairman former Senator Tañada and other Bayan leaders were at the planning room in Camp Crame until the US helicopter rescued Marcos and his family and staff from the frate masses at the gates of the palace.

Edsa I uprising was not himited to Edsa You should not airbrush the masses led by the progressive religious of Christians for National Liberation, the Kilusang Mayo Upo and the League of Filipino Students who concentrated on Mendiola and then on the gates of the presidential palace after they valuantly did away with the barricades. If those that assembled at Edsa were decisive in protecting the failed coup leaders, rallying the biggest mass of demonstrators and encouraging the military to withdraw support from Marcos, those that assembled in front of the palace were decisive in compelling Mar-cos to flee after a RAM-piloted helicopter dropped grenades on the palace roof and the US announced that it would withdraw military support from Marcos should he use force to stay in power. At any rate, Ambassador Bosworth, the CIA station chief and General Ileto were busy from day I of the Edsa I days, tying the hands of Marcos according to instructions from Philip Habib who was the crisis manager at the level of the US Nation al Security Council

Most organized

Also, the people's uprising was not limited to the national capital region. Bayan had the most organized masses rising up against the Marcos fascist dictatorship and neutralizing the pro-Marcos local officials in so many provincial capitals, cities and key municipalities. Bayan Angeles City stopped on its tracks the tank convoy of Gen. Palafox. Gen. Renato de Villa put his command and personnel in alliance with Bayan Bicol in order to serve notice to Marcos that Edsa had a deep reserve in the provinces.

Let us recap and go comprehensive What was the most decisive force or what were the most decisive forces in the overthrow of Marcos? I would point to the broad masses of the people that showed up at Edsa and before presidential palace. But I dare not single out any of the organized forces as the most decisive, without clear qualification. It was a convergence of various forces that overthrew the Marcos regime. Various forces were decisive in their respective ways. The legal and underground Left were most important and decisive in contributing the most tested and most organized masses that served as hard core of the broad masses at Edsa and elsewhere. But certainly the most decisive in emasculating Marcos within the ruling system and at the same time keeping the ruling system intact were the US, the Catholic hierarchy, the business groups, Aquino and her followers and those high Marcos bureaucrats and military officers who turned against Marcos.

Marcos is through mobilizations."

We also lost confidence in the ability of the masses to move on their own, and we overlooked the cracks in the military.

We were aware that the opposinon-Cory et al.—was capable of mobilizabons, but we were not aware of their strength.

Civil disobedience

After the election, Marcos issued threats and some middle forces came to us. They said "you are right." A few days after, the opposition recovered its footing and Cory called for civil disobedience. Boycott San Miguel. Boycott the crony press.

The boycon was strong. That was be-rween Feb. 7 and Feb. 22. We said we should launch our own mobilizations

That's when I went to Mindanao. There was a major rully in Davao City organized by Bebot Bello, who was by then no longer for Bayan (Bagong Alyansang Makabayan), but for the opposition.

He contacted me because Cory, who was in Cebu, could not fly to Davao for security reasons. He suggested that I grace the occasion in lieu of Cory.

The people, spontaneously, following the leadership of the opposition under Cory, came in big numbers. That we could not grasp.

Alienated

Then I was called to speak. When I stood up, a sea of people shouted "Cory! Cory!" I was shocked. I felt so alsenated

I went home on Feb. 22. By then Cardinai Sin was already calling on the people and Butz Aquino to defend the military.

Sacrifices

What nited the balance against Marcos was the accumulation of strength built up by the Left. There were many sacrifices. Many died. Many went underground.

The armed contingent contributed to the accumulation of strength and consolidanon of forces against Marcos.

This accumulation of strength was what finally gave confidence to the national politicians who later came to us and started oining us, except for such stalwarts such as Lorenzo Tañada who was our chair all throughout, and Ambrosio Padilla who was our president

Then of course there was Pepe Dickno in the Jala (Justice for Aguno Justice for All) days. We had people such as JBL Reyes joining us. We had a great group. But we committed errors. We were overconfident. For instance, when we founded Bayan, we decided that the people who should be in the national council should be mostly us. The only one who stuck it out with us was Tariada. Even Diokno left, Then the Social Democrats left, Bandila, etc. That was the first Bayan congress in 1985

Bayan would have been a broad alhance. But it was not democratic. It bulbed.

That was a major error. The second, bigger error was the boycott of the snap election. I was a rejuctant follower of the boycott line because I always thought one had to be with the people. We would be marching, screaming militantly and the people would be watching us. Alex Padilla stud, Etta, the crowd is going the other way. We're losing them."

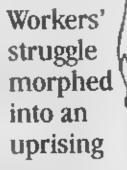

We tried to adjust according to the situation at Edsa. Bayan had no banners there because we knew that we did not unitiate it. We roamed Edsa. We talked to the masses. They also loved us, but we committed a mistake. The masses were not angry with us. The leaders of the Yellow Group, Cory Aquino group, were because we boycotted the election.

The Left did not exercise leadership at Edsa, but it was there. We interacted with the people. Our heart was with them. Whether or not we exercised leadership in the final ouster of Marcos, the point is the victory against Marcos was something we should share.

I too was very happy when Marcos left. But we were disoriented because things did not happen the way we thought they should happen. We took a very dogmatic and rather sectarian stand that failed to grasp the realities on the ground.

It was a continuous, hard and long struggle Our organizets were imprisoned (I myself was jailed for a long time). Many others died. By 1986, we were about

Because of our struggle, others sectors were enlightened. Before if you ask them, 'Are you in favor of what the KMU is fight ing for?" They would not answer immediately. But through painstaking struggle, along with other factors like the deteriorating economic and political situation, we won them over to our side

That struggle metamorphosed into an uprising in February 1986

The promise of Edsa was transformation of Philippine society from lascism to democracy, from poverty to satisfaction of human wants.

'No concept of partial victory'

By Ricardo Reyes

HE MORE ACCURATE WAY OF POSing the problem Is: Why was the Left left behind during the final days from the snap polis to the four-day revolt? A number of reasons

 The strategic framework at that time did not include the concept of partial victory, which may involve sharing power even as # minority at a result of insurrectionary upheavals, this was admitted officially by the leadership of the Communust Party of the Philippines not directly but by forwarding a conceptual design for the crisis of governance, which but the administration of Corazon Aquino after the 1989 coup d'état taunch offensives both political and military, which will lead to an uprising where the Left may gain a minority share in state power

2) Tactics-wise, the CPP policy of boycotting the snap elections put it in a position that was directly opposed to the sentiments and actions of the large mass of the working people and the middle classes, and patriots in the upper layers in the urban ar eas and many parts of the countryside Thus, the marginalization at that moment

3) The boycort policy even as a tactic was not processed enough even according to CPP organizational rules. Such a major policy must be deliberated upon at the very least by the CPP Politburo and ideally, by the Central Committee (CC). But the five-person CPP executive committee (EC) took it upon itself to make the decision. Thus, the later CPP Politburo April 1986 decision criticizing the boycott decision of the BC and its violation of CPP rules.

Divergent views

But the larger usue is the democratic processing of a major policy at a time when divergent views on how to deal with the snap elections were strongly coming out from among the regional committees and the general membership. What became highhighsed was the uner weakness of nuner-Party democracy for a long period of time

4) Parts of the CPP organization like Mindaneo where the insurrectionary spirit of the masses were developing fast in complementation with daring and effective armed actions of the New People's Army were hobbled by the effects of the anti-doa campaign-the Kahos

Sad to say, yes, the party leadership was caught flatfooted by Edsa I

But it was something waiting to happen. The dictatorship was unraveling fast in 1985- sustained mass protests, the appearance of RAM, political forces forwarding a post Marcos scenario and Marcos and his ilk unable to come up with a fresh formula to overcome the political and economic crisis. The US started to send signals that it was distancing itself from Marcos. A US policy option paper—NSSD docu-ment—described Marcos as "part of the problem and part of the solution."

Power sharing

Various possibilities were cropping up: 1) A power sharing between Marcos and his elite rivals; 2) A Marcos ouster by a combination of mass pressure and coup d'état; and 3) A violent crackdown on ail anti-Marcos forces to save Marcos rule. But ractics-wise, the Parry leadership did not seriously prepare for all possibilities, especially that of the Marcos ouster by a broad front of all anti-Marcos forces. The EC boycott decision paper gave so much weight to Marcos surviving and warning of a possibility of a power sharing formula among elite factions

The situation was very fluid and the anti-Marcos forces kept holding the initiative. The snep election campaign was showing strong signs that the balance of forces were tilting in favor of the Aquino-led forces. Ouster was a strong possibility. But the EQ limited its sights. The EC's fault lies in bringing the Party to a position, which frontally opposed the broad mass sentiment and actions, thus isolating it from the main current of the antidictatorship struggle and making it vulnerable to marginalizing maneuvers by the elite forces. To repeat, the BC's fault lies at the tactical level and in restricting effective discourse to a few and decision-making to itself. At the strategic level, the CC should be faulted for affirming a limiting strategic framework.

The Left got stuck in one corner as a rerult of the boycott call. It was the anti-Marcos elites led by Aquino, and later joined by Enrile and Ramos, which seized the leadership of the antidiciatorship struggle. After Marcos had his Butasang Pambansa declare him winner of the map election, the Party tried to prepare for a weigung bayan. But it was too late. The four-day Edsa revolt was fast comung.

The April 1986 Polithuro meeting declared the boycott decision a major tactical error and criticized the EC for making a vital decision that rightly is bestowed only to the Politburo or CC by the Party Constitution and rules.

BAGUIO CITY-FLOWERS ARE THE MOTIF FOR the annual Panagbenga or Baguio Flower Festival. But on its 11th staging here on Saturday, the flowers drew varied meanings for people mulling President Macapagal-Arroyo's declaration of a state of emergency.

Some Metro Manila residents Sampaloc, Manila. left the capital for Baguio to escape the political crisis by watching Panagbenga.

"It's literally hot there in Manila. We were about to attend the rally in Édsa (to commemorate its 20th anniversary], but [we] decided to come [to Baguio] instead," said Reggie Paglinawan of Pagimawan was wearing his original yellow "Cory Aquino for President Movement shirt, which jibed with one of the dominant colors of the first parade in thus year's festival.

The flowers worn by participants from Tanudan, Kalinga, "expressed hope for me," said a visitor who only wanted to be identified as Karina.

She spent an hour waiting for the parade by reading the news.

As early as 7 a.m., rows of Baguio residents were busy poring over newspaper accounts of the state of emergency declaration on the sidewalks of Session Road.

The Saturday parade was one of two independent festival highlights that were produced this year by two contending organizers.

Mayor Braulio Yaranon invited dancers and drum and lyre corps from Manula, Pasig City, Naguilian town in La Union, flocos Norte, Laguna, Cavite, and Pangasman to showcase costume and dance highlights of festivals that emerged after Panagbenga was developed in 1995.

The Department of Tourism refers to Panagbenga as the model by which other local government-sponsored festivals are developed in the country.

Yaranon said he wanted to showcase the multicultural legacy of the festival.

But residents and visitors who watched the parade shricked as the float bearing the "housemates" of the hit reality television show Pinov Big Brother" passed them.

Many people, most of them carrying camera phones, spilled to the street and followed the float to take snapshots of the housemates led by grand winner Nene Tamayo, Sam Milby, Say Alonzo, Magsaysay, Chx Alcala, Franzen Fajardo and Cassandra Ponti, among others.

Mayor not yet cleared of slay

By Tonette Orejas PDI Central Luzon Desk

CITY OF SAN FERNANDO-THE DEPARTment of Justice has ordered a new investigation of the possible link of Mayor Jasme Ylarde of Dingalan, Aurora, to the 2005 murder of a local publisher.

in a three-page resolution, Senior State Prosecutor Emmanuel Velasco referred to the National Bureau of Investigation and the police the "further investigation of the possible involvement of Ylarde, as well as of other persons," in the murder of Starline Times Recorder publisher Philip Agustin.

The order was dated Jan. 26 but Agustin's relatives received it only on Feb. 24

There were "not enough (pieces of) evidence" at this point to establish the involvement of the mayor in the May 10, 2005 murder, Velasco said in the resolution ending the case's preliminary investigation

He said the second extra judicial confession of one of the three suspents, Reynaldo Morete, was not enough to link Ylarde to the crime.

Morete, Velasco said, made several inconsistencies in his two affidavits even as he claimed that he witnessed Ylarde order two other suspects, Nilo Morete and Manuel Alday, in April 2005 to kill Agustin for a series of stories that exposed the mayor's alleged use of disaster funds. The Moretes are cousins. The killing happened in the house of Agustin's daughter a few hours after the publisher arrived in Dingalan to deliver the copies of his newsweekly's special issue on Ylarde's supposed misuse of public funds.

Agustin was the 67th journaust killed since 1986, according to the National Union of Journalists in the Philippines.

In the DOJ resolution, the Moretes, Alday and several unidentified persons were ordered indicted for the murder.

However, the police have yet to arrest Nilo Morete alias Boyet and Alday, also known as Anuel. They were last seen in Dingalan on Dec. 31 last year, reports said.

'Tsunami' scare sparks evacuation

By Alex Pal PDI Visayas Bureau

DUMAGUETE CITY-Thousands of residents from the coastal towns of Danin, Zamboanguita, Siaton, Sta. Catalina, Bayawan and Basay fled their homes and sought the safety of higher ground Thursday over a rumor that a tsunami was going to hit southern Negros Oriental Thursday night. The tsunami rumor started from a text message that circulated like wildfire after an Intensity 7.8 earthquake struck somewhere in Africa Thursday morning.

A taunami that killed thousands of people across Asia in December 2004 was triggered by a landslide in Indonesia.

Police have already declared the text mes sage as a fraud Thursday night, but there was no more time to stop the evacuation. Melvin Ramon Buenafe, Negros Oriental police provincial director, said the text message was originally sent by someone from Hong Kong who sent the text message to relatives in Negros Oriental after hearing about the African earthquake.

On Apo Island, off the coast of Davin town, nearly half of 1,000 residents walked more than 300 steps uphill to seek safety near the island's lighthouse.

Cheers, jeers for state of emergency

By the PDI Mindanao Bureau

RESIDENT MACAPAGAL-ARroyo's declaration of a state of emergency has elicited various reactions from the people

Although some sectors aired their support to the declaration, many felt it was not neces-

The Southern Command, the largest military installation in the country, has placed its troops under a red alert status and monitored troop movements amid reports of recruitment by coup plotters.

Defying the declaration, militants have aired their disappointment by staging

In Cotabato City, hundreds of Muslim demonstrators flocked to the city plaza and denounced the declaration.

In Cagayan de Oro City, policemen dispersed some 3,000 people attending an anti-Arroyo rally in Divisoria.

But in Davao City, hundreds of protesters were unmolested even as they called on Ms Arroyo to step down.

Davao City Mayor Rodrigo Duterte vowed to uphold the people's right to assembly as long as protest actions remained peaceful. Excerpts from some of the reactions:

We condemn the declaration, which would further suppress the people's cry for a change in our government." -Zainab Ampattan, Suara Bangsamoro national deputy secretary-general

"We are ready to be arrested."-Randy Ponteras, Laban ng Masa

"Mindanaoans are saddened over these series of plots to dethrone the government. We as a people must stand up and protect the rule of law and the Constitu- present one rather than have a coalition mangyayari diyan." -Riche Nobles, housetion."-Romeo Serra, vice president, Philippine Chamber of Commerce and Industry, Min-

"She has made the right decision, but the rights of the people should be protected and respected."-Basilan Bishop Martin Jumoad

Supports the President but will allow protesters as long as they remain nonviolent. -Misamis Occidental Gov. Loreto

The Camiguinous give their unconditional support for President Macapagal-Arroyo in declaring a state of emergency." -Camiguio Gov. Pedro Romualdo

The declaration "would certainly put our country many steps backward in the eyes of the world, leaving our economy more handicapped... However, such action is justified under the Constitution to maintain civilized and a law-abiding society. As a Filipino, I am saddened that these things are happening. When are we going to learn?" -Cagayan de Oro Vice Mayor Michelle Tagarda

"It is the prerogative of the President to see to it that the government is on top of any situation," -Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao Gov. Zaldy Ampatuan

The President did the right thing. -Hatimil Hassan, speaker, ARMM Regional Legislative Assembly

I find no problem in the declaration as long as the President "[does] not harass the media and suppress press freedom. -Lorie Ann Conde, account executive of the Courier Weekly, Butuan

"It is a legitimate move of a legal government to protect itself from those who would like to grab power. If nothing is done by this government and a coalition government is formed, who will compose it? For how long will it stay? I will settle with the without assurance of success." -Prof. Geoffrey Salgado, historian and dean of the College of Arts and Social Sciences, Mindanao State University, Rigan City

"She did the right thing. Those opposed to her have abused their rights." -Debbie Lynn Mangubat, Combato City

The declaration has convinced me that there is indeed a serious threat to the Arroyo administration."-South Cotabato Gov. Daisy Avance-Fuentes

"Our place has been peaceful and the unrest is happening only in Manila. So based on our present situation here, PGMA has no basis in declaring a state of national emergency. Manula is not the Philippines." General Santos City Mayor Pedro Acharon Jr.

"It is nerve-wrecking in the sense that little by little, the rights of individuals would be curtailed. It is totally baseless." -Rolando Deticio, Board member,

The declaration seems to respond to the gains of growing dissent and restlessness of the people... This government can't stand but suppress democratic rights of the people whose intentions are valid, healthy and moral. The declaration must be denounced." -Bishop Felixberto Calang, Iglesia Filipina Independiente

"Her move is unnecessary. For as long as there is no physical violence committed by the people, any move to curtail their freedom to celebrate and to articulate their sentiments is tantamount to a repressive ruie." -Andoni Andresan, businessman, Tandag, Surigao del Sur

"The declaration proved that the Arroyo government is in a state of panic." -Franklin Guillano, physician, Davae City

With the state of emergency in, I'm afraid martial law is not far away from being declared. [The President] is bent on holding on to power at all costs. Proof was her recent statement before a group of journalists that she alone is fit to lead the country. Let's pray that there will be no bloodshed and abuses by authorities." Ret. Philippine Constabulary Maj. Mohammad Adil, Cotabate City

"While it is part of her broad powers as the commander in chief, the conditions on the ground do not warrant such an exercise." -James Reserva, law professor, Urios College, Butuan City

"Part long yong ng drama sa teleserye ng bayan natin. Wala ding wife, Buttian City "I was shocked and hurt when television networks reported that I was reheved because of my involvement in the coup. That's not true. I still don't know why my name came out. They could have based it on my previous background... I remain committed in the chain of command. I am in Manila right now because I'm on vacation leave since Feb. 20. The report I went on hiding is not true." -Col. Ariel Querubin, Marine commander Those wanting to copple the government has not gained support from Mindanao yet. Even Magdalo soldiers who had been released from detention and now form part of the Southcom remain in camp and are Zamboanga City

To all RP Open ticketholders and badminton fans:

We will all have to wait a bit longer for the mangural Philippine Open!

Due to circumstances beyond our control, the Bingo Bonanza Philippine Open that was scheduled on March 1 to 5 at the PhilSports Complex (ULTRA) will be postponed until later this year.

In view of the current situation, participating countries have been duly advised by their respective governments against traveling to the Philippines in the meantimo. This is of course very understandable.

The organizers are working with the International Batimuston Federation to find a suitable date within the international calendar. Nevertheless, all international participants are eager to come to the Philippines on this later date, when the situation has normalized.

To all who have purchased tickets to the event, please hold on to your tickets as these will still be honored on the new event dates. You may also call Ticketworld (8919999) for a refund, if necessary.

We look forward to seeing you at the event. With more time to prepare, we know that the Bingo Bonanza Philippine Open staging will even be better!

See you all soon!

SO THICK was the mud at the landslide site in Guinsaugon that a US Marine used a shovel to pull another Marine out of the muck. The US 31st Marine Expeditionary Unit was diverted from the Balikatan exercises in Jolo to help in the search and rescue operations.

told the Inquirer

The governor said there were not enough words to express her gratitude to the hundreds of local and international volunteers who had helped in the operations.

She said she flew over the site vesterday, "and for the first time I was really overwhelmed by the magnitude of the landslide."

"It was a moving sight, and it made me [appreciate al. the more] the bigness of the hearts of our companions and friends from the international community who came from all over the world to help the people of St. Bernard," she said

Lenas said an Indonesian team would stay on for one month as a medical mission, while US forces—some 500 American Mannes dispatched from the RP-US Balikatan military exercises-were still helping with the relocation of around 400 who escaped the landshde and many others who were evacuated from nearby villages

About 3,314 evacuees, including 648 from Guinsaugon, are housed in five evacuation centers in the town proper.

Dr Puji Pupono, regional head of United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination (Undac), said the response of the volunteers demonstrated how nations were prepared to work together to respond to a

He said Undac believed that at this point, attention should be paid more to the survivors and evacuees.

"Retrieval can go on later," he would eventually be turned into even after 10 days. "a sacred sanctuary, where we can remember those who died."

St. Bernard Mayor Marja Lim said they were still looking for relocation sites for the 400 survivors. She said one of the identified sites was in Barangay Tambis Uno, the village next to Guin-

"But the site is small—only about 1.5 hecrares. We need at least two or three hectares to accommodate all of them in one area," Lim said

Guinsaugon, the fourth largest village of St. Bernard, has a land area of about six hectares, most of which was planted to rice.

Before the landslide, its population stood at around 1,800.

The governor and the experts may have lost hope in finding survivors, but not Samuel Bacor, 34

"They are my daughters," Bacor said of Ella Joy, 9, and Shean Mae, 4, "I beneve that they are still alive

The body of his wife, Thelma, 33, has been found and buried.

Bacor, a seaman, was on board his ship based in Argentina when he learned of the Feb. 17 mudsude. He returned to Guinsaugon on Feb. 22.

The distraught Bacor said he now that he had lost his family and home

Different

Benjamin Hong (not Hung as earlier reported), coordinator of the 33-member Taiwanese rescue team, said Guinsaugon was different from other disaster sites Lerias said the disaster area where survivors were still found

"A mudslide is different from an earthquake," Hong told the beourses about an hour before he and his team left Guinsaugon at 2.30 p.m. yesterday.

He added: "Under a structure [toppled by an earthquake], there's air. There are chances of survival even five or six days later. In a mudslide, the area is covered completely [and] the chances of survival are much, much more slim.

"We are very saddened. I'm sorry about the tragedy. Everybody tried very hard to complete the job."

Lerias said the remaining Filtpino volunteers and soldiers belonging to the 8th Infantry Division would no longer actively search for the Guinsaugon Elementary School, where over 200 pupils and teachers are believed buried.

On Friday, rescuers using satel lite photos thought they had found the school site when a photo showed a slanted roof under several feet of mud.

It turned out to be a house, the governor said.

'Debris avalanche'

Mahar Lagmay, a geologist from the Department of Environdid not know what he would do ment and Natural Resources, said their studies had shown that it would be difficult to find any more bodies and structures in Guinsaugon.

He said almost all the structures in the village had been moved by more than 500 meters from their original sites by the mudslide.

"What hit Guisaugon is what we call a 'debris avalanche.' Three million cubic meters of earth pushed the houses..." Lagmay said.

With these findings and in consultations with other experts, we came up with the conclusion that it's time to end the rescue ef fort," he said.

Johnny Ong, who is part of the combined team of geologists from the University of the Philippines and Ateneo de Manila University, said they had pinpointed six sites where the retrieval operation could still continue.

Many of the villagers were believed to have been dragged to these sites by the mudslide, he Lenas said it was at the same sites that they had hoped to find survivors. But she said they had to suspend search and rescue operations several times because of heavy rains.

I I-day drive in Oman

"Nature was working against us, and it has not been easy," she

The disaster in Gumsaugon has spurred Filipino workers in Oman to launch an 11 day humanitarian drive (from Feb. 20 to Mar. 1) for the survivors and other victims.

The aid effort, called "Help Leyte Fund Drive for Landslide Victims," was launched by some 40 community leaders under the Filipino Social Club based in Muscat, the Omani capital.

The club, chaired by Melvin Villaflor, is the sole Filipino orgamization recognized by the Omani government. With a report from Jerome Aning 1081 or 1017? AFP chief fumbles not once but twice

forcer of her controversial emergency proclamation cannot quite get a handle on what animal he is riding.

Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Generoso Senga yesterday made a slip of the tongue not once but twice, citing "Proclamation 1081" when he meant "Proclamation 1017 "

Proclamation 1081 was the infamous document with which the dictator Ferdinand Marcos declared martial law in the country on Sept. 21, 1972, that would last for 14 years.

On Friday, just as the nation was celebrating the 20th anniversary of the 1986 People Power revolution that ousted the Marcos dictatorship, Ms Arroyo declared a state of emergency under Proclamation 1017.

She said that because of a "tactical alliance" between the extreme Right and Left in a conspir acy to bring down the duly constituted government, she was calling on the Armed Forces to maintain law and order and prevent or suppress all forms of lawless violence and rebellion throughout the country, as well as enforce obedience to all her decrees and

No difference

If some of Ms Arroyo's critics are to be believed, there is no difference between 1081 and 1017, as they warned of a regime of warrantiess arrests and detention without charges.

The Free Legal Assistance Group, which defended victims of human rights abuses during martial law for free, did not seem to see any difference between Ms Arroyo's 1017 and Marcos's

Some legal experts have pointed out, however, that the President did not include in her state of emergency declaration the suspension of the writ of habeas cor pus-the privilege which protects citizens from illegal detention and searches-or the placing of the country or any part of it under martial law.

But if ordinary citizens could mistake 1017 for Marcos's martial law proclamation, it is not surprising as Senga himself appeared to be just as confused.

"This morning, I issued a guidance to all commanders down the line so they would know the guidance in the implementation of Proclamation 1081, as well as general orders we received from our commander in chief," Senga deciared in a dzMM radio interview anchored by Vice President No.1 de Castro no less

De Castro may not have noticed the slip as he did not correct

Getting it right

Eventually Senga did get the prociamation number right.

"The primary agency that will move is the Philippine Nationa. Police and we are ready to assist them if they ask for our assistance based on Proclamation 1017," he

In yet another radio interview later yesterday, Senga again shpped up

Asked about the implementing guidennes he issued during a command conference earlier that day, Senga referred to "Proclamanon 1081" as he enumerated the guidennes.

He did not notice the mistake, but as the interview went on, he easity made the shift to "Proclamation 1017 "

Senga had just graduated from the Philippine Military Academy when Marcos declared martia. law in 1972.

Batch of '72

Some of his batchmates in the Masigasig Class of 1972 are in key positions in government, among them Philippine National Po ice Director General Arturo Lomibao, retired Gen. Efren Abu, Senga's predecessor as AFP chief of staff, retired Vice Adm Ernesto de Leon, the former Navy chief, and retired Lt. Gen. Ediberto Adan, former chief of the Southem Command

Takeover of Tribune

Lomibao said he would recommend that the PNP take over the operations of The Daily Tribune, a broadsheet critical of the Arroyo administration. That means the government

Lomibao said the paper had been engaged in "a concerted effort and systematic conspiracy with known elements out to bring down the duly constituted government since May 2004."

"[This] renders it a clear and present danger to the country and its people," he said

But Ninez Cacho-Olivares, the paper's publisher and editor in chief, said she would continue to pub.ish.

"We will publish as we wish We are still going to write what we want. If they insist on prior restraint, let them close it. But the closure of the Tribune must come from the government," Ohvares told the INQUIRER. "We will commiue until they shut us down."

Officers of the PNP's Criminal Investigation and Detection Group raided the Tribune's editorial office past midnight yester-

Janitor Ronald Semiliano said the policemen took page proofs of the paper's Feb. 25 issue and photographs and copies of the reports faxed and e-mailed by its reporters before leaving the office on the 9th Floor of the GLC Building on T.M. Kalaw Street in "One or two of them had a video camera," said Semillano who, along with a security guard, was the only one left in the newspaper office.

He said he had earlier learned that the policemen had gone to the paper's printing office in Port Area at around 11 p.m.

They got nothing there because the newspapers were already out for distribution," be

Some cops remained inside the editorial office as well as outside the bunding.

They were quite apologetic, saying they were merely following orders from their higher-ups," Semillano said.

Insp. Jonathan Pablito of the Group in Camp Crame said they were given orders to secure the facility, "which is considered a potennal source of destabilization

Freedom of the press

Repeatedly challenged during the press conference, Lomibao was asked if the government's acnon did not constitute a curtailment of the freedom of the press and was, therefore, unconstitu-

At one point, he said the PNP was "find[ing] shelter in General Order No. 5.*

He said other media organizations would face the same fate as the Tribune if they did not hew to government standards.

"Until yesterday, when a civilran-backed military uprising was crushed by authorities, the Daily Tribune was deeply engaged in a continuing propagation of disinformation and publication of sedimous and scurrilous remarks or articles," Lomibao said, adding:

"We will recommend that the government direct the operations of the Daily Tribune, to ensure that the newspaper will not be used to propagate disinformation, antigovernment messages and information that incite to sedition."

Lomibao also said the PNP would move against persons, groups or business establishments that, according to its evaluation, would "contribute to the exacerbation of the national emergency."

With this clear mandate from General Order No. 5, we will car ry out appropriate actions and security measures to prevent an escalation of the situation," he said. The move on the Tribune was meant to show a "strong presence, to tell media outlets not to connive or do anything that would help the rebels in bringing down this government," said Michael Defensor, the President's duef of staff. "This is an abnormal situation.

This is not a joke or an invention; there is a possibility of an armed takeover of the government. A government has the right to prorect itself," Defensor told re-Asked if the government beheved that the Tribune could be part of the alleged conspiracy, he said: "Could be, could be. We can't say because they might do something."

But Defensor refused to call the Tribune case a government

We did not meddle with their headlines and content, so it's clearly not a takeover. They're continuing to print," he said. "I hope we'll never reach that point [of the government dictating the editorial content of a newspaper]."

He said the only media outlet that had been closely monitored by the authorities was the Tribune, and denied reports that certain tabloids and broadcast stations had also been put under surveillance.

Defensor said policemen were at the Tribune to check and not interfere with its operations.

He said the Tribune was targeted because its past headimes showed that it had a rendency toward leftist and rightist propaganda to bring down the government.

pro-[Joseph] Estrada, but they cannot be antigovernment or procedel at this point," he said.

Back-channeling

Defensor said the government had conducted "back-channeling efforts with owners and managers of different media outlets to explain the situation."

He dismissed criticism that the Tribune case involved censorship or media harassment.

You should understand we are in an abnormal situation. We don't want to stifle press freedom, and we will not do that. But in this situation we have to help one another," he said.

On the other hand, Eduardo Nachura, the President's chief legal counsel, said he did not anticapate the government takeover of Tribupe when he helped draft Programation 1017.

But Nachura said he did not believe that it was "really indicative of any blanket action to be taken against all media out-

Asked if Ms Arroyo should speak out to clear the matter, Nachura said: "I suppose she should."

Pacifico Agabat, convenor of the Movement of Concerned City zens for Civil Liberties and a former dean of the University of the Philippines College of Law, said the raid on the Tribune was "unconstitutional "

"It can't be justified under a state of emergency. Even marrial law does not suspend the Bill of Rights. Freedom of expression can't be curtailed unless there's a clear and present danger of rebeilion or invasion. So far, there's none," Agabin said in an inter-

You can't equate newspapers with public utilities. Newspapers enjoy freedom of the press. Public utilities and other industries are operating under a license that can be revoked by the government. Newspapers don't need a license," he said With reports from Gil C. Cabacungan Jr. and TJ Burgonio

Edsa Shrine remains a symbol of hope

By Edson C. Tandoc Jr.

Text us your feedback:

FOR 26-YEAR-OLD MARIANO Satu, the Our Lady Queen of Peace Shrine on Edsa is not only a proud symbol of the 1986 Peo-ple Power Revolution, or a per-fect site for anti-government protests, it is also a home where he and other ordinary people have found hope.

Satu is one of the caretakers of the Edsa Shrine in Mandaluyong City, built in honor of the masgive uprising that ousted the Marcos dictatorship 20 years ago, on a tract of land donated by the Ortigas and Gokongwei families to the church.

Satu used to be a street kid, wandering about in Manula City just wearing his traditional gstring, being a native of Kalinga Apayao.

Rude awakening

He was just nine years old when, one day, he woke made their house and found that his mother had left him and his elder sister, bringing only their youngest sibling with her.

His father already dead by then, Satu and his sister were clueless why their mother suddenly left them. "Maybe she could no longer afford to raise us," he told the Inquirer. But Satu did not give up easily

The nine-year-old boy worked in the rice fields and with the money he earned, he got on a bus headed for Baguio City, determined to find his mother, even if he did not know exactly where.

Satu said he was shocked when the bus driver told him he was already in Cubao, Quezon

He walked amlessly still wearing his g-string, until he reached what he now knows as the Luneta Park in Manila City. For six months he wandered about the city, eating only fried bananas using the meager amount he had saved, scaring other street children because of the way he was dressed and the way he spoke.

But one day, while he was taking a bath in a public fountain, a security guard accosted him.

The guard brought him to the social welfare and development office in Manila City, which later turned him over to an orphanage, where he learned how to speak Filipino and started to wear "norma, clothes."

He was 16 when he decided to leave the orphanage. The security guard who had found him offered to adopt him. But surprised to learn that the good samaritan had nine children, Satu decided to go his own way.

"I would just be another mouth to feed. I did not want to be an additional burden on his family," he recalled.

He went back to the streets. But one day, Bishop Soc Villegas, then the rector of the Edsa Shrine, found him in San Juan

Just like what he had done to countless street children, Villegas brought Sant to the shrine, gave him food and taught him catechism.

Satu said he tried searching for his mother and siblings again but failed.

"I have learned to live alone. The shrine became my home. It was as if (Bishop Villegas) adopted me," he said.

Satu became one of the beneficianes when Villegas provided free houses three years ago for at least 42 families, many of whom were former street children who wandered around the shrine.

When Villegas left the parish to become the Bishop of the Dio-behind Satu, who later became a regular employee of the shrine.

Paying it forward

He may have forgotten how his siblings looked like, but Satu still remembers everyone who has helped him: if he has extra money, he buys vitamins for the street children still in the orphanage where he came from, he buys groceries and sacks of nce for the family of the security guard who rescued him, and he visits Villegas in Bataan almost every week.

"I am happy with my life now. I would work for the shrine as long as I can," Satu said.

His happiness is shared by 27- Away from politics year-old Crisanto Gestiada, one of the three sacristans at the shrine. He expects to earn his college degree next yearthanks to a former classmate who brought him to the shrine in

Gestiada said his eyes grew 'wide the first time he entered the

"The people here were all very decent—the way they talked, the way they dressed. I mid myself I wanted to be like them," Gestada said.

But coming from a poor family, he only managed to firush high school. His parents sent him to the La Salle Greenfulls in Mandaluyong City to take up a free vocational course, although he really wanted to earn a de-

He enrolled in Business Management at the Jose Rizal University in Mandaluyong City in 2001. He expects to graduate

He said his work as a sacristan has also strengthened his faith. T became closer to God. I learned to love my family more as well as to value my job," Gestiada said.

He said that most of the employees at the shrine were from poor families. Many of them, like Sani, were former street children who used to roam around

In celebrating the 20th anniversary of the 1986 People Power Revolution, the shrine apparently tried to steer away from politics and instead organized activities that sought to redefine people power."

A week was devoted to free semmars on possible livelihood opportunines like soap making and candle making. Parishioners are also given the power to help, even in simple ways, old and renired priests.

In front of the entrance is a game called "fishermen's net," where parishioners can pick a fish made of paper, written on each are ways to help the priests, like bringing mais or towels Many people are responding favorably, shrine employees said

For Satu, Gestiada (both delined to be photographed for this story) and the countless people whom the shrine has given home and hope, real people power is not about noisy but ephemeral political changes.

it is about people quietly bringing extraordinary changes in the lives of ordinary people.

Parañaque school still closed

By Jocelyn R. Uy

THE ST ANDREW'S SCHOOL IN Parañaque City will remain closed until further notice, health officials announced yesterday.

School officials earlier declared a week-long holiday when 11 students were hospitalized for symptoms of mercury exposure following a class experiment on Feb. 16.

Although only one of the 11 students is still confined at the Philippine General Hospital for further observation, two more students were also reported on Enday to be suffering from the same

Dr. Eric Tayag, director of the National Epidemiology Center, however, said the two students are "not seriously ill."

Officials of the Department of Health and City Health Office (CHO), meanwhile, asked school administrators, in a meeting on Friday night, to map out a contingency plan should efforts to decontaminate the school drag on.

The school is negotiating with Metrowide Environment Consulting: Inc., a private company, to conduct the mercury spiliage cleanup, which would cost about P1 million, he said.

The cleanup is set to start on Tuesday and, hopefully, would be completed by:

The DOH and CHO are keeping warch over 106 people from St. Andrew's-89 students and 17 teachers and staffers-who are suspected to: have been exposed to the chemical.

Initial reports said a teacher was discussing mercury with 80 students in at science class when some of the chemi-: cal, which was in an open beaker, was;

The contamination, however, further spread when one of the staff cleaned the two classrooms, where the chemical was spilled, using a floor polisher.

Tear-gassed at Libis

By Fe Paller Que

HERE IS SO MUCH JUBILATION. JUNE KEITHLEY'S voice cracks as she announces early in the morning that we have won. Brenda and I quicken our pace from Guadalupe bridge towards Camp Aguinaldo. You have to walk a long way. I think this is our third day at Edsa. Yet you do not feel tired. There is energy in the air.

The streets are blocked with cars and groups of people-families and friends who have set up camp everywhere. You feel a strong bond with the faceless crowd now dancing, shouting, smiling and even offering breakfast to just about everybody. There is a certain force, a sense of pride that binds us together.

But something is wrong. We see helicopters hovering over Ortigas. June Keithley retracts. It is a false alarm. Marcos troops are massing by the trackroads. Some trucks are now in Libis.

Brenda and I move quickly to go there. True enough, trucks of troops in their dark fangue uniforms gloom this surmy, cheery, yellow-colored morning. I see many inter national and local correspondents on their toes for any major development.

Suddenly, a commotion, I hear guns cocked. By instinct, we turn back and run. I was just wasting for a bullet to pierce through me. Somebody hurled a tear gas. My eyes were on fire. I can-

in my mind, my future passes through me. How can I be an actress if I go blind? A nameless lady grabs me. I ask for water. People are helping each other and offering water. I wash my face. I feel better although my eyes and face are stinging still.

I do not see Brenda. But I know just where to find her Funny, mobile phones for the ordinary man is unheard of yet. But we keep track of each other, of minute to minute developments by radio, by word of mouth and because our mands were focused on the same things. Telepathically, we were collectively "online."

So we walk back to Edsa, a silent voice saying that is where we should go. There, a new wave of multitude from all walks gather, block the Marcos forces and ask the troops to back off and join us. Nobody is giving instructions or asking us what to do.

We just know.

THIS IS WHERE Cardinal Sin once told Cory Aquino, even before Edsa i broke that she would become president. This is also a table for entertaining, for counseling estranged couples, etc.

THE CHURCH

Villa San Miguel is a house with many moms. It has ready rooms for priests who need a place to rest. It has big rooms for big meetings as big as all the bishops of Asia and small rooms for small meetings like prewedding interviews. That Villa San Miguel has many rooms is to be expected. It is not a villa for nothing!

What makes Villa San Miguel most memorable to me are the many tables in the house. Villa San Miguel is a house of many tables! The tables give character and identity to the rooms.

The office desk

From this table, he took the telephone, called Radio Ventas and summoned the people to go to Edsa.

Cardinal Sin's office desk is an old style narra table with carvings on the corners. It has the usual drawers on the side of the person working on the table. The only drawer Cardinal Sin really used was the long drawer on the level of the stomach. Here he kept rosaries, stampitas, medals and little religious articles. These were given away generously to the guests and visitors. There is no peace without prayer. From that small drawer, he gave tokens to his guests and reminded them to pray. A nation at prayer is a nation at peace.

There is something peculiar about his office desk. It has a movable table extension in front so that his guests can have a place to lay their cups of coffee or cake plates while they talk to the Cardinal. Over a cup of coffee or a glass of juice with a slice of cake or a simple sandwich, Cardinal Sin entertained his guests, counseled estranged couples or mediated between politicians. That hade table extension has served muncios and archbishops. Its unique design even became a conversation piece. How can you fight against someone who eats from the same cake? The easiest way to cool hot heads is through the stomach. This is a table extension for peace.

This was the table on which he read letters from popes and cardinals, from Kings and Presidents. Here on this table, he read countless manifestos of the urban poor and political prisoners. Here on this table, he wrote his pastoral letters, signed them and issued them. Here on this table, he read "The Imitation of Christ by Thomas a Kempis, his favorite spiritual reading book. Here on this table, he read the newspaper and magazines and scribbled his Spanish poems.

In the morning of Jan. 20, 2001, the future President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo called on Cardinal Sin at Villa San Miguel and told him that she was accommodating the request of the generals to give former President Estrada an honorable exit from office. The Cardinal's face grew red. He pounded his hand on his table and said, "Gloria, you are now the President! You are now the Commander-in-Chief. If you begin your presidency by doing what the generals want, you will have to do that for the rest of your term. Let the generals obey you and take order from you. Please take your oath. The people are waiting for you."

GMA: Will of God

At this moment, the cell phone rang and the caller informed her that the negotiations with Estrada had reached an impasse. Putting down the phone, she said. "Your Emmence, this is the will of God for me. I will take my oath at the Edsa Shrine by noon." The Cardinal bowed his head and his tears felled on his desk.

What a historic table this is! If tables can speak, I am sure every fiber and splinter of this table will proudly reteil recent Philippine Church history.

The second table is one of a kind in the whole house. It is the only round table in the house that sits 16 persons. To bring the table into the room where it is now, we had to dismantle a part of the wooden wall to bring it through.

This table is in the barroom. It used to have a wine bar during the time of Cardinal Rufino Santos. It was originally a recreation room for a leisurely drink or just to laze around and watch the television. It has evolved through the years. The television is not there anymore. The lazy seats are not there anymore. The wine bar is not there anymore. It is still called Bar Room in spite of the changes

The Bar Room has become a room for confidential meetings. The 16-seater round table is symbolic of the rules that operate in those meetings. There is no special place for the head. All are equal in this arrangement. The discussants look at one another; listen to another and decide together. This round table is symbolic of the Church as a community of disciples called by the Lord personally and yet answering the all of the Lord together. This table is symbolic of the Church as people of God.

Cory, you'll be president

On this table, Cardinal Sin met his Board of Consultors once a month in order to decide on matters affecting the Church. On this table, he met Gov. Chavit Singson and allowed the tense governor to lay before him all the evidence against the incumbent President (Estrada). On this table, in the presence of the Board of Consultors, he told Cory Agumo that she will be President of the Philippines long before Edsa broke out. On this table, Cardinal Sin prophetically told Cory Aguno to prepare her gown for her oath taking as President of the Philippines. On this table, he met then Vice President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo during the Erap Kesign Campaign and advised her on moral principles for moral governance. On this round table, he made decisions that changed the course of our history.

Table of peace

The true table of peace is Jesus Himself. This is symbolized liturgically by the altar for the Eucharist. From the table of the Eucharist, we are fed and nounshed. On the table of the Eucharist, we lay our gifts for the Lord. There is a second table for the spiritual nourishment of the people of God. it is called the table of Word. The Word of God refreshes us and gives us strength.

The desk table in the Archbishop's Office is a veritable table of peace. On it, feuding camps were reconciled, differences were resolved and commitments to peace, no matter what the cost, were vowed

The huge round table speaks so eloquently of equality and justice, one of the many pillars of peace. It speaks of a Church less concerned with dignity and more preoccupied with humble service From the table of "communto," we find the bread of peace. In the House of Sin, the house of many tables, there is peace.

That was a long time ago-Andre Mauross writing of the triumph of Joan of Arc in his "History of France."

There are the seeds of human greatness in the stories of the two innocent women who, five centuries apart, railied people through their own fauth to rise against tyranny, it is story that can never be told too often and, no matter how it ends this time, is a lesson in the dynamics and wonder of democratic political leadership.

The miracles of Cory Aquino were made not by God but by millions of men and women who invested themselves in her They made her what they hoped to be, and she made them for a staning moment invincible.

There may be trouble, too, for the inspiring President Aquino. There was for the Maid of Orleans when she was captured in 1430. Been there in '72 and '78, seen it in '83, but missed '86

TRITER GLORIA GARCHITORENA-GOLOY HAD BEEN in the midst of all those dramatic moments in the nation's history since her once renowned Manila Times newspaper was unceremoniously shut down upon the declaration of martial law in 1972. She was in the rallies in 1978 when a began to speak out. She was at Luneta in 1983 at the funeral of slain opposition leader Benigno Aquino whose murder galvanized the client majority into action.

But she rues she missed out on the one aluming moment in the life of the country-1986.

This is ber lament.

It is a missed opportunity I have regretcowed nation finally found its voice and ted, year after year, each time the historic event is recalled in celebratory media prose and visuals. I can never hope to be listed in the Edsa I heroes bonor roll because I never made it to the privileged gathering that swelled in such spectacular numbers, the whole world sat up and took notice.

I wasn't there when the stretch of Epsfanio de los Santos Avenue (that's Edsa, of course) began to fill up with a rapidly growing multitude in the area between Camp Crame and Camp Aguinaido and, as the numbers multiplied, had to spill out to the side streets, forcing people who had come out to join the massed gathering, to abandon their vehicles and to trudge the rest of the way on foot.

Later, when aerial photographs were shown of the four-way spill-out, the recorded visuals resembled that of a huge cross of humanity dispersed in this remarkable display by an Unseen Force pulling off a capricious stroke of art.

I wasn't there to join the quiet crowd keeping pace with the solemn Mass riguals performed by priests in the makeshift altars, set up wherever space was made available.

I wasn't there when an agonized col armed "exemy" battalions retreated, named lected shout rose as a convoy of tanks hove into view and this was met by what us now called the first line of defense -a group of nurs stolidly holding a gallant stand, armed with nothing more menacing than their respective rosaries in hand.

I wasn't there when a great roar rippled through the crowd gathered in Crame's vast grounds as one helicopter at first circled tentatively then touched down to disgorge its pilot, Col. Antonio Sotelo, to signal what was to become the turning point of the three-day military impasse—the capitulation of the government forces to the rebel group

Subsequently, the tanks, the heavily

Gee, I missed that most dramatic point of the Edsa history-in-the-making.

For I was home, nursing a 170/90 hypertensive discomfort, having stayed up all night and early morning listening to the radio blow-by-blow account by June Kelthley of the dramatic turn of events.

This was how I was able to keep track of what was happening, where it was happening, keenly aware that something historic was unfolding. Looking back afterwards, I realized that the moment was lost to me forever. Because I wasn't there,

Where were you when it happened? Memories of an AP man

By Ruben G. Alabastro PDI Day Desk Editor

HEN DISASTER strikes, people would ask: Where were you when it happened?

On that Saturday afternoon in 1986 when Juan Ponce Enrile fled to Camp Aguinaldo, my kindly boss at The Associated Press was watching a movie somewhere in Manila

The day had been awash with rumors. I was alone in the office when the phone rang. It was Eggy Apostol, the Inquires founding publisher. She wanted to talk to David Briscoe, the AP bureau chief, and she sounded breathless.

"Enrile is about to be arrested by Marcos. He has gone to Agumaldo. Go there. He needs ali of you to be there," she said.

I called David but the maid said he had gone out to see a movie. It was a world still without cell phones and I called again and again. A political upheaval was in the wind and the chief AP correspondent in the Philippines was enjoying a movie, I gritted my teeth.

Just then, our news editor, Mike Suarez, (Story on this page.) called from Cebu where he was covering Cory Aquino's civil disobedience campaign. He told me to drop everything and go to Agumaldo.

Other reporters had arrived at the Defense Department but no one seemed to know what was going on.

I flew.

Chopper brings firearms

The whir of a helicopter sent us running to the windows. Soldiers were jumping out of the chopper, struggling with bulky carres sacks.

"Mga armas!" someone said. in my adult years I had known no president except Ferdinand Marcos. Since he declared martial law, his word was law. The toughest generals quaked in his

Now, his own soldiers were preparing to fight hum.

The day had changed for us all. I called my wife. She was working as a secretary at the malacañang press office. I told her about Enrile, the sacks of guns. "Go home," I told her.

She said she still had work to do. Please, Dada, I said, go home now. "Iba na ito, ayaw mo naman talaga kay Marcos, di ba? Hindi na legal ang gobyernong ito," ! pieaded

She would not listen. She had been working at Malacañang for 15 years but her heart had been quietly for Cory.

She said she was staying on

I called again, begging, She insisted she could not leave her officemates behind. "Pono namon sila? ... Huwag mo akong alalahanin," she said.

Her voice was breaking. She was almost crying. She hung up again.

Once more I called, but she would no longer lift the phone. I knew she had made up her mind.

No Yes man

I called the news desk. David, already in, was filing stories. In the next several hours, I phoned in whatever scrap of information

Correspondents from the world's major newspapers trickled in. We were told to go to the social hall. Enrile and Gen. Fidel Ramos were seated at a long table surrounded by bodyguards. Ennie announced he was breaking with Marcos.

"He misread me. He thought I'd be like the men who say yes to him," Enrile said. "I am a peasant, not like him who was born a rich man. I've seen danger more than he has seen in his life ... I have long wanted to break off, but I just couldn't do it."

The room was astounded. The man who for years had looked so obedient to Marcos was fuil of de-

4 sleepless days, 80 stories on the A Wire

Cory Aquino forms

new government

S MORE AND MORE PEOPLE MASSED ON EDSA HOURS after Enrile and Ramos announced they had broken with Mar-Los, my mind raced three years back in time to a raucous, smoke-filled bar in Ermita. Over beer and cigarettes, a small group of foreign correspondents were discussing the day's events when two of them got into an argument.

proach at how the first massive anti-Marcos demonstration in the wake of Ninoy Aquino's funeral had ended peacefully. "They'll never get rid of Marcos now!"

How wrong he was!

I was covering Cory Aquino, then in Cebu as she and other opposition leaders tried to drum up support for a civil disobedience campaign and a boycott of companies owned by Marcos cromes. The crowds that lined the route of her motorcade and later attended a rally at Fuente Osmeña were remmiscent of the throngs that greeted her and running mate Doy Laurel a month earlier as they campaigned for the Feb. 7 snap presidential election. It seemed as though the entire province of Cebu was out that day in January, lined up on both sides of a coastal highway around the entire island.

It was past noon on Feb. 22 when I returned to my hotel room to phone in a story that Cory had already picked out members of her future Cabinet.

Ben Alabastro, who would normally be off on Saturdays but had taken over my shift at the news desk in Manula, was agitated. He had just been tipped off that Enrile had broken with Marcos and was holed out at Camp Aguinaldo. Porget my story, I told Ben, and go find out what was going on there.

Stuck in Cebu

After ringing Belinda Cunanan's room and apprising her of what I had just been told, I jumped into a taxi and headed for Fuente Osmeña. Cory was already addressing the crowd. Nene Pimentel said he knew nothing about what was taking place in Manila and neither did anyone else in Cory's party.

Directing news coverages was part of my responsibility as Philippine news editor for The Associated Press. Yer, here I was stuck in Cebu, with no available flights to Manila and with opposition leaders just as ignorant as myself about events in the capital. I worried that the only help Ben had at that time was another newsman taking the day off and chief of bureau David Briscoe, who was out of reach. All the other AP people from such bureaus as Tokyo, Bangkok and Singapore who had helped us cover the election were long gone.

Long nights

What a great relief it was when, back in the hotel later that afternoon, I found out that Briscoe had already put out a few leads. But it would be a long night, actually the first of maray.

A crowd that included weekend diners as well as local journalists and foreign correspondents had formed in front of a relevision set in the lobby of the Magellan Hotel, Thanks to FEN (the US military's Par East Network) they caught glumpses of Enrile and Ramos' news conference. Someone had also turped on Radio Ventas full blast in another newsmen, an American, with a tinge of re- TV, the journalists had grown restless and some had gone out in search of a statement from Cory and other opposition leaders.

Punentel, John Osmeña, Ramon Mitra, Bono Adaza and a few others showed up at the hotel later, but they did not have much to say. It turned out that some of them had tried but failed to convince Cary to fly down to Davao City and set up a provisional government.

80 stories on A Wire

her news conference the following morning, when she called again on Marcos to step down and appealed to civilians and "decent elements" in the military to support the putschists trapped in Crame and Agunnaldo.

I made it back to Manila in the afternoon of Peb. 23, just as our reinforcements from other Asian bureaus were coming in. The volume of copy the team would move to the rest of the world was something I had never seen in nearly a dozen years with the AP

Whereas the Manila bureau would be elated in the past to get at least one story a day on the "A Wire"-AP's crème de la crème that got the world's top stories to every major newspaper and radio station in the United States—we had about 80 Philippine stories on the A Wire on those four sleepless days alone, with some help from the Washington bureau.

My first excursion out of the office since presence because of his allergies. returning from Cebn would be to Edsa, just before dawn on Feb. 24. The crowds had thinned out considerably during the night. Near the corner of Edsa and Bonny Serrano was a phalanz of soldiers, but it was hard to tell on whose side they were until they started swinging their batons and lobbing teargas. Suddenly, the chilly Pebruary morning breeze changed direction and blew the acrid fumes back into the ranks of the soldiers. The crowds cheered, and calls went out for reinforcements.

By mid-morning, journalists were being shooed away from the Malacañang Press Office, then in a building adjacent to the St. Jude Church, it was no longer safe, warned Col. Vicente Tigas.

Blast on street

Sure enough, as I crossed J.P. Laurel Street, which was deathly quiet and deserted, I felt a loud blast behind me, accompamed by the sound of breaking glass combined with the crack of splitting wood and crunching gravel. As I swung around, a Sikorsky assault helicopter came into view over the treetops and quickly pulled away. A few explosions followed the first blast, and then came bursts of M-16 rifle fire. The place recked of gunpowder.

One soldier, speaking through the thut iron gates, said he had been hit by shrapnel but it was not serious. Losing no time, I and phoned the news desk.

A short distance away, thousands of students taunted soldiers manning barbedwire barricades on Mendiola Bridge. One of them shouted at the soldiers to give up, saying, "We now have an air force and you don't "The soldiers did nothing.

Marcos would go on the air again shortly afterwards to complain that his family was cowering in fear inside the Palace because of the threat of more helicopter attacks. But "They've lost it!" exclaimed one of the part of the lobby. By the time Marcos came on mind you, he added, he was fit and strong and "quite ready to go into combat."

'Marcos pa rin'

Back at the Palace the following morning to cover Marcos's manguration, I found Malacañang in disarray. Between 2,000 and 3,000 Marcos loyalists were trampling on the vegetable plots into which imelda Marcos had converted the once-manicured lawns. "Marcos po rint" they chanted.

No one outside the Ceremonial Hall No statement would come from Cory until heard Marcos's speech. Seconds after he began talking, saboteurs knocked off the television relay to Roberto Benedicto's Kanlaon Broadcasting Center. On seeing the TV monitor blink out, Hermie Rivers, one of Marcos's close-in media aides, slumped in his seat, arms danging loosely and chin resting on his chest. Marcos didn't seem aware of what had just happened

No one in the hall could hear him either. The 500 people admitted to the ceremony were standing on the velvet-covered benches, yelling at each other to sit down so they could get a better view of Marcos.

Borgy in battle fatigues

Most of them wore casual attire and some were in slippers. They had littered the carpet with plastic cups and a few were even smoking, normally taboo in Marcos's

Only seven of his more than 20 ministers were present. Conspicuously absent were Arturo Tolentino, who was to have been swom in as Vice President, and Prime Minister Cesar Virata. Marcos' grandson, Borgy, was a sight to behold. Like his uncle Bongbong, the three-year-old tot came in military battle fatigues.

They did not say goodbye

Appearing on a Palace balcony later, Marcos, flanked by Irnelda and the rest of his family, addressed the noisy crowd below. Both he and Imelda had a few fighting words, but not one of them told the crowd that all but a few thousand soldiers—mostly in the Presidential Securky Group-had abandoned them, Nor did they say they'd be gone in a few more hours.

Late that night, after Ramos' confirmation that US behoopers had flown the Marcoses to Clark Air Base and not Paoay in Ilocos Norte as widely rumored, I waited for a chance to interview Earlie. He was back at his office in Camp Aguinaldo, receiving a long line of visitors. It was near 2 a.m. when I was ushered into his office and he briefly recounted Marcos's last two telephone calls pleading with him to be allowed to stay on as ceremonial president.

Back in the office, I began pounding away on a side bar. It told of how Marcos, who had ruled for 20 years without challenge, found his last days a nightmare of erknocked on the door of a nearby apartment ror, bombast and finally humiliation.

"Wow ... Wow," David kept muttering on the other end.

In Enrile's room later, the phones kept ringing. Taking one cail, the rebel minister spoke softly into the phone, his face drawn. I called in that detail, too.

Ramors swirled: "Aatakihin daw tayo ngayong gabi."

David sounded deathly worried for me. He said: "If you want to leave, please go. "

I have never been a brave man. That night I realized that perhaps, in some situations, it is not the individual who makes the decisions for himself but the situation decides for him. I stayed on-

Unforgettable dawn

Hearing people had begun to gather on Edsa, I went around the camp to see. It was past midnight. Civilians were leaning over the walls and dropping food packs. They were not more than a few dozens.

The massive tide of people support for the rebels had begun as a small wave before dawn

Years dim memories but not the memory of that Sunday when Enrile, a rifle slung over his shoulder, crossed Edsa to link up with Ramos at Crame.

Loudly reciting the Rosary, their heads erect, and trying to look brave, nuns marched like soldiers behind the man who had once been the face of a repressive

Enrile was finally out in the open, and I kept looking around for possible assassins. His head bowed in deep thought, Enrile marched on. Then the cheering crowds swallowed him I called David and said I had never seen anything ake it.

I break a leg

On the third day, the rebels knocked out Channel 4.

I pleaded with an old man at the gate of his house near the TV station to let me use his phone. Sounds of gunfire echoed around in the sala, a scared woman crouched against a wail. I tood the News Desk that loyalist troops were putting up resistance.

The fighting subsided, I walked into Channel 4 and saw rebels ripping off Marcos' wall pictures with the ends of their rifles.

Guns blazed again. A soldier shouted: "Umaatake sila!" I told the office that Marcos troops were on a counterattack, then I ran out to the lobby, looking for an exit. I hadn't nonced a low fountain, fell into it and broke my leg. I didn't know the fountain had been emptied of its water.

At the hospital, a doctor putting my leg in a cast asked if Marcos would be able to hold out. I said I thought he would.

That night, Marcos appeared on Channel 9 Seated at a table in a gloomy room, he looked so alone, as if bereft of all power.

Marcos on his knees

"Is this being broadcast on TV and radio?" Marcos asked, not aware he was on. "Mr. President, you are on TV and radio," someone said

"But I can't hear myself anymore," Marcos said. Facing the camera, he began 18-suing orders, calling on supporters to come to the Palace. At long last, he was on his

David asked me to do a night lead. The story I wrote was of a man talking to a nation that was no longer listening. The next night, the Marcoses flew out of the Palace. Foreign news agencies scrambled to put out a FLASH, each wanting to be the first to tell the world the dictator had fallen.

The man who had ruled my life for 20 years, made me talk in whispers or look over my shoulder before I said anything about him or his wife during the harsh years of his regime, whose decrees caused me to be detained twice by police berduges known to torture detainees, the only man I had seen surrounded by so many psychopaths, was gone. Somehow I felt an empuness in my life.

Bloodied 'barong Tagalog' and whiff of expensive perfume

By Mel Lopez

(The author, a former mayor Manila, was part of the opposition struggle against Perdinand Marcos. He was at Edsa during the 1986 uprising and was among those who first entered Malacafiang after Marcas fled. Here are some of his recollections)

N THE SECOND DAY of the uprising, government forces began moving towards Aguinaldo and Crame. I remember vividly the moment when, amidst cheers from the crowd, I hung a rosary on the main gate of Aguinaldo, symbolically locking it.

The rosary was one of the emblems of the peaceful revolution

Mission: Protect Palace

Two days later, when word came out that the Marcoses had left the country, I was told by opposition leaders Salvador Laurel and Lorenzo Tañada to proceed to Malacañang to protect its historical and cultural relics from the mobs.

I joined the first group of "freedom fighters" to enter Maiacañang. Our group included Tarlac Gov. Jose "Apeng" Yap and Arrys. Jaime Lopez, Francis Gar-chitorena and Jejomar Binay. Inside, we met Col. Carlos B. Manalo of the Philippine Constabulary, whom Gen. Fidel Ramos had sent to search the area for booby traps.

I recall feeling a deep compassion for two foam mattresses, presumably used by Marcos when I saw his empty bed. Beside at stood a small writing table. A toilet was

The 7 x 15-meter room looked and smelled like a hospital.

It stank of blood and urine, probably from frequent kidney treatments. Two dialysis machines and large medicine cabmets stood against the walls. Sprawled on the floor, on either side of the bed, were doctors or medical aides at night.

Barong for oathtaking

Yap went through the Marcos things. He muched a bloodied barong ragalog—the former President had worn earlier in the day during his oathtaking on the balcony.

Although ilk, Marcos loved to work, I realized. He had small working tables not only in his bedroom but also in his bathroom.

I supposed he continued to pore over and sign documents while he was undergoing treatment, or even while he was in the bathroom.

Large footprints

But what struck me most were the signs that the Marcoses had left in a hurry. Suitcases and boxes of medicines lined the walls leading to a small, inner room

The door opened to a grassy knoll facing the Pasig. An escape route, I thought. Large and muddy footprints marked the path leading to the bedroom: They were probably the footprints of American military personnel or big Filipino soldiers who had come to fetch him.

Last prayer

Candles still glowed at the bedroom altar. The family must have prayed before they left. A cook told us that imelda had been praying with a certain Baby Rodriguez and one Mrs Espinosa.

I had no more anger left for Ferdinand Marcos after I saw his room.

Nearing Imelda's own bedroom, 1 caught the whiff of expensive perfume and I knew, without looking, that her room would be opulent and ostentatious.

I didn't want to feel anger again, so I did not go in.

I went down and saw several high powered firearms on the ground floor. Thompson submachineguns as well as carbines, which Marcos had probably used when be was a young guerrilla. As for the controversial Springfields, he must have used them during his student days, Col. Manalo said.

Witnesses told me some firearms in the Malacarlang armory were stolen by militants who had entered the Palace ahead of us.

Reminiscing on my fight against the late dictator, I believe he might have handled the case of Ninoy Aquino better if he had not been ill. And he became intoxicated with power, the power the people had given him.

He missed the opportunity.

It was like God was there and His lambs were ready to fluig themselves under the tracks of military steel, if ever General Tadiar did not have the fear of the Lord.

'God intervened'

By Anton C. Natividad

Thile events were unfolding fast at Edsa, I heeded the call for citizen support. On the night of Feb. 24, I told my driver to bring all the used tires on my Land Rover and headed for Edsa. My intention was to give away all the tires for burning. There were brownouts then. Edsa and the streets leading to it were unlighted.

On Feb. 25, after Aquino and morning after the revolution was a Marcos were proclaimed separately as Presidents, I went to Edsa in the afternoon. Tension was frightening.

Tired, we went home after reports said that huge crowds of people were heading for Malacanang amid rumors that Marcos and his family had fled. There was widespread jubilation among the crowds.

The morning after Marcos left the country, I passed Edsa on my way to visit my sister in Makati. This time, I smelled the strangeness of the air I breathed. The air was fresh-energizing, light. I had the feeling that it was rejuvenating.

Along Edsa, I noticed the street was miraculously dean and it was emptied of people, unlike during those events nights before. It was as if events on those previous nights were dreams and nightmares. The day of awakening from a deep slumber, facing a brighter day. it was then that I realized that God had intervened at Edsa.

I noticed the people I met on the road were smiling with joy, while convoy of smiling soldiers were giving out the "peace" sign. It was the day of joy, unity, harmony and peace!

RAMIL Bisera blasts out of the sandtrap on hole 8 of the TCC Invitational at the TCC course in Sta. Rosa, Laguna.

By Ernesto A. Gorszales

STA. ROSA, LAGUNA—JUVIC Pagunsan is 18 holes away from making the swift transition from an amateur champion to a professional winner.

Playing on a course where he capped an illustrious campaign as a national team standout last December, Pagunsan scored a third straight 1over-par 71 yesterday to open up a two-stroke lead after three rounds of the P4 million The Country Club Invitational here.

The lean, dusky and power-hitting Pagunsan parred the last 10 holes while his closest challengers struggled on the sleek greens of the exdusive TCC course and closed in on the P1.2 miltion top prize in his second tournament as a money player with a $4-hole total of 213.

Putting will be the key factor in the final round," said the 27-year-old Pagunsan in Filipmo, who steadied himself after a roller coaster start of three bogeys and two hirdies on the first eight holes of the wind-swept course.

Cassus Casas, the event's mangural champion in 2003, moved into position to challenge Paguasan even as top favorice Frankie Miñoza and defending champion Jerome Delariante shot similar 2-under 68s to advance six strokes off the lead.

Casas needed two burdles on the last five holes to match Pagunsan's 71 and tie first-round leader Ramil Bisera for second place at 215. Bisera, a former caridy from Davao's famous Apo course, burdied the 17th then rescued par after barely missing the big lake beside the 18th for a 72.

Artemio Murakami, a brand-new pro like Pagunsan, held the solo lead going into the final nine then stumbled on two bogeys and a double bogey to wind up in a deadlock for fourth with Gerald Rosales at 217. Murakam finished with a 74 and Rosales accounsed for one of the day's three par 70s.

Former RP Open wittner Robert Pactolerin also had a 72 for solo sixth at 218, then came Miñoza and Delariarte who took advantage of their "fucky escape" to catch up with Mars Pucay (73) and Carito Villaroman (71) at 219.

for only the second time, had nines of 33-35 in a five-birdie, three-bogey round. Delariarte birdied three times on the back to highlight a 35-33 trip on the par-70 course that hosted the SEAG golf competition last December.

The two finished fied with five others at the cut-off mark of 151 in the second round. Only two from the group were supposed to complete the last 16 slots for the final two rounds, but organizer Ricky Razon, who is hokling the tournament in memory has father Don Pocholo, decided to allow all those in the deadlock to advance.

Although Pagunsan's last RP stint came in the Putra Cup in late December, it was in the SEAG where Pagunsan capped his distinguished amateur career with a gold medal double, winning the individual competition and powering the national men's team to a runaway victory.

Pagunsan easily hurdled the Asian Thur qualifying early last month and played in his first procommander, under the sponsorship of ports services magnate Razon and Maruman, in the Pakistan Open where he earned a little over $1,000 after collapsing in the final round.

If he wins, he would pocket one of the biggest championship prizes in a tournament outside of the RP Open.

Orcollo dazzles in maiden US stint

Dennis Orcollo arrived in the United States International Pool Tour hardly noticed. But by Sunday, after topping the tough IPT qualifying tournament C, the 27-year-old pride of Surigao is being hailed as the next Filipino billiards sensation. The acknowledged Philippine netted him the IPT card needed

"Dermis' hard work paud off," said Orcollo's benefactor Perry Mariano, who supported Orcollo's entry to the US billiard scene. "He may lack title here in the Philippines, but he's feared as a money game player."

Canlubang completes PAL Interclub double

By Musong R. Castillo

DAVAO CITY—IT WAS THE SAME STORY ON A DIFFERENT DAY.

Canlubang ripped Southwoods apart as promised on the final day to handily win the men's Regular championship of the 59th Philip-Dane Airlines Interclub and complete the Sugar Barons' first-ever title sweep yesterday.

Reed thin Jonel Ababa, playing in a big-time competition on his home course, turned in a second straight one-under-par 71 for 37 points at Apo here to lead the Barons' final-day charge that resuited in a six-point win over defending champton Southwoods.

The Barons talked 140 for the day to finish with 553 points, easily wiping out Southwoods' two-point lead at day's start as RP pool members Erwin Vuluan and Michael Bibat only scored identical 35s to lead the Carmona-based ream's 132 in the final round for a 547 aggregate.

"It was really just a matter of 21-point swing, Ababa and Bayron time," non-playing slupper Luigi Yuto said. "We knew we had the edge in this course and by the time our second guy (Ababa) and (Jay) Bayron (second-to-last) got off the 13th green, we knew we had it (won)."

Mark Fernando, a rookie like Ababa, posted a second 36 and Bayron accounted for 35 before Boyet Saragoza's 32 rounded out scoring for the side that won the Senior's championship for the first time last Saturday. Veteran Abe Rosal's 29 was thrown away

The shotmakers from Laguna raised their record leading total of Regular titles to 13 in this popular event generally admowledged as the national dub team championship. Canlubang's overpowering performance at Apo yesterday reprised the team's sizzling second round where it moved ahead following a Thursday, which ended with the Carmona-based bets trailing by 11.

The Sugar Barons regained the lead after eight holes and were two up when the last flight holed out on No. 9.

Del Monte, the 2004 champion which will be a co-host next year posted just 1.10 points to finish therd, 49 behind, Joel Opaco's 32 was the best for the Bulcidnon bets with Louis Dacadao contributing 29, Ondoy Mondilla 25 and Iggy Clavecilla 24. Jolan Minoza's 22 was discarded.

Hanson So Jr. rebounded from a 27-point effort on Tuesday with a 34, but Gene Bondoc, also a member of the national training pool, was good for only 28. The 27 of Jong Laput was disregarded.

"They played very well," Southwoods skipper Thirdy Escano said of the Barons. "If you shoot anything close to even par (in this course), you deserve to win."

Ababa, the winner of the initial also led the Barons with 37s on National Caddies' Open last year, submitted two strong rounds on the course where he caddled for more than seven years.

At the Rancho Palos Verdes, Cebu Country Club captured its fifth Pounders Dyssion crown in six years with 472. Wack Wack was second with 455.

Palos Verdes topped the Sportswriters Division with 411, nipping by a point Orchard. Villamor was third at 406. Zamboanga ruled the Friendship Division with 362.

Here's looking at the 60th PAL Interclub

DAVAO CITY-BARELY HAS THE SMOKE OF battle cleared but my thoughts are on next year's PAL interclub already.

ONEL Ababa gets victory ride as Canlubang's star in a final round rally that gave the Sugar Barons the men's division title of the 59th PAL Interclub yesterday.

Next year is the 60th edition of the PAL Interdub, the nation's unofficial golf team champtonship.

If Domeng "Popeye" Duerme is upbeat, I can't blame him. In 1997, Domeng scored big by masterminding the golden edition of the PAL Interclub in Bacolod.

Not a single hitch his the Bacolod bash. Domeng was ecstatic even weeks after it was late, late hinch at Ken Angeles' Yellow Fin Restaurant along Quimpo Blvd. "The coming PAL Interclub will be another challenge. But I'm not worried one bit. I have a strong support staff and with teamwork as our guiding principle, I'm certain of another trouble-free PAL Interclub next year"

The 50th PAL Interclub was extremely memorable for me.

Know why?

I won the PAL Media Tournament that year.

In dramatic fashion yet!

OK, it's bragging time, fellas. This happens only once in a blue moon so, let me go through, please? I'm sure even Jimmy Bautista, Henry So Uy and Bong Cruz won't mind—them being fellow golf buffs anyways.

I've been covering the PAL Interclub for more than a quarter of a century now (there, fve added life to my years, see?). And, as always, our tournament format in the PAL Media Tournament is two rounds, medal

After the first round in Bacolod, I was three "Here we go again," Domeng tells me over a strokes down. By dint of hick, I made a successful rally in the second round to win by one.

Yes, by one, fellas.

You win by one in any tournament, it sticks to your mind the rest of your life.

For the record, I'd won the PAL Media Tournament once, if not twice since we hatched the event in 1978, or 1979 maybe. But the 1997 victory was the sweetest.

First, the business class ticket I earned in 1997 as winner, I gave it to my daughter, Malaya. That year, Malaya used the ticket to fly to New York via Vancouver It gave her the thrill of her life as it was her first trip to the Big Apple.

Second, I got a high when Rollie Estabillo, the vice president for PAL Corporate Communications, sent me a signed congramatory note for the feat. Well-written as usual as we all know Rollie is a certified wordsmith like Bob Woodward and Russell Baker, if not William Safire, 1 had it framed.

Oh, yes, Rodie Estabillo.

During the dinner he hosted on Wednesday for the media covering the event, Rollie mentioned about a plan to put up a huge souvenir rogram for next year's PAL interclub.

Since we will celebrate next year the 60th year of the PAL Interclub, we have to do something big," he said. "A magazine filled with mementos and memous should be great stuff!"

I second the motion, Rollie.

Call the lot an assignment any assignment, and I'll come running. Even a one-on-one unterview with The Kapitan, I'll not balk. Try me.

The good, ole times about the PAL Interclub, they will always be a joy to write about.

Meanwhile, not only me but also Malaya is looking forward to next year's event so, let me start brushing up on that back swing in preparation for the PAL Media Tournament in Cagayan de Oro City. Hove the challenge of every Big One.

The flying elbow did me in this year although it wasn't downhill all the way. Some good putts allowed me to collect some bets from Domeng Duenne and Jake Ayson-thanks to the putter that Jake Ayson had lent me after my putter of nearly 15 years broke in two at Palos Verdes.

Negros, NCR arrange PFF title showdown

By Cedell Tupas PDI Visayas Bureau

BAROTAC NUEVO-TEENAGE audfielder Jason Panhay of Negros hated the loss to flodo in the National Under-19 semifinals last year so much that he couldn't wait to get back at an Hollo squad.

So when he got his chance yesterday in an even more prestigious tournament, Panhay made the most out of it, leading Negros Occidental to a 2-1 win over its rival before a hostile crowd at the Barotac patch.

The win gave the Negrenses the first finals berth in the PFF-National Men's Open championships.

Defending titlist National Capital Region beat North Cotabato, 4-2, at penalues and will face Negros for the title at 2 p.m. today. The two teams were fied, 1-1, at regulation.

"I had always wanted to beat any team from Hoilo after the under-19 tournament [because] we knew we could have won that game," said Panhay, the youngest member of the Negros squad at 19.

Panhay played a crucial role for Petron,

Negros in the under-19 tourney, where it saw its bid ended by Iloilo, 2-1, also in the semis in Bago City.

But for Panhay, winning in this football-crazy town made it more special.

"We lost at home so it's also special that we won in their home field," said Panhay who struck in the 5th minute, blasting a curling free kick 20 yards from the left flank that silenced the crowd.

He padded Negros' lead to 2-0 with a brilliant individual effort in the 28th minute, before Ruben Doctora gave lloilo a ray of hope with a goal from close range in the 38th.

Rey Malonzo 'willing to serve' as OMB chief

¬ DU MANZANO, CHAIR OF the Optical Media Board, has tenure of office until December this year.

But talk of replacing him from the antipiracy post that he has occupied since 2004 began circulating after his recent brush with Leo Martinez, director general of the Film Academy of the Philippines, over the allocation of funds from the profits of the Metro Manila Film Festival last year.

The name of former Caloocan City Mayor Rey Malonzo has surfaced in this buzz as Manzano's possible replacement. Martinez is said to have initiated the move to replace Martinez has denled this, and Manzano has shrugged off the rumor, saying it has been going around for six months now.

"President [Macapagal] Arroyo congratulated me last Monday because the Philippines has been taken off the priority watch list of the US trade representatives as a piracy hot spot-the first time in five years," Manzano related. Only Ms Arroyo has the right to replace him, he said (the OMB chief is appointed by the President). "I serve at her pleasure." in a phone interview with becomes on Thursday, Manzano noted that he was working not only for the movie industry but also for the software and product licensing businesses. "The movie industry is only a part of the scope of my job as OMB chair."

Manzano had just arrived from Cebu City where he conducted a bust against a local pirate of fake video products.

Confirmation

Malonzo confirmed to Inquirer, also last Thursday, that some sectors in the film industry are working to have him installed as OMB chair. He did not elaborate. "[But] I'm willing to serve if I'm appointed," he said.

Like the President, Malonzo and Manzano are members of the Lakas Party. Manzano's predecessor in the anti-pracy board was Sen. Bong Revilla, also a member of Lakas.

Martinez demed that he was batting for Malonzo to replace Manzano. "I did not make any (such) recommendation to the President," he told inquires on Thursday.

Martinez said an ABS-CBN crew spotted hun talking to Malonzo at the Manila Hotel on Monday. "We just exchanged pleasantries and didn't talk about the OMB."

MTRCB: 'South Park' offensive

By Marinel R. Cruz

MALONZO

CABLE DISTRIBUTOR SOLAR Entertainment has discontinued the airing of the animated senes "South Park" on Jack TV after the Movie and Television Review and Classification Board complained of the program's "offensive nature."

In a press statement dated Feb. 23, MTRCB Chair Manssa Laguardia announced that Solar Entertainment "voluntarily agreed to desist from airing the cartoon until further nonce."

Laguardia ordered the review of the program's episodes from Jan. 28 to Reb. 18 after the Board received calls and text messages from viewers saying "South Park" offended the sensibilities of Roman Catholics.

Blasphemy

Laguardia said she received a text message complaining that the show "blasphemed Jesus Christ by calling Him a nitwit." She said the texter rized pointed out "vulgar disrespect for the Biessed Virgin Mary."

"South Park," follows the misadventures of four foulmouthed third graders-Stan. Kyle, Kenny and Cartman. The show is set in the town of South Park in Colorado. It is based on the short film by Trey Parker and Matt Stone titled, "The Spirit of Christmas." Laguardia said an adjudication board is scheduled to meet with So-Entertainment on March 3 to discuss the issue. The adjudication board is comprised of Orlando

Alfred Yuson and lawyer Paulino Cases. "We've not reviewed all the episodes, but I saw one show where Jesus was boxing with the Devil. I personally think the show violated MTRCB rules and regulations, but it's best to wait for the official decision of the board," Laguardia told luquatea

All of these elements distract, and distract from the fact that this is a kiddle singing contest. Instead of pointing its young talents in the right direction, the show makes them acquire bad performing habits and attitudes. This unhealthy trend should stop.

All we need to do is to look at the kiddle division of the "Star Search" talents search on US television (telecast here on the ETC chan-

But, just a weeks later, another young Fil-Am singer named Maridel trounced the competition and ended up as the weekly winner.)

FANS of film director Quentin Trantino, rejoice. The eccentric maker of "kick-ass" action-dramas now uncovers man's darkest fantasies in the horror-thriller, "Hostel." Unfortunately, he isn't megging the movie, and is only one of its producers. Still, even a smidgen of Tarantino goes a long way with his fans, so the film's release in the United States as "Quentin Tarantino Presents Hos-

MTV Philippines Managing Director and VP Jack Madrid said this deal gives MTV additional media piatforms to reach out especially to tech-sayvy audiences.

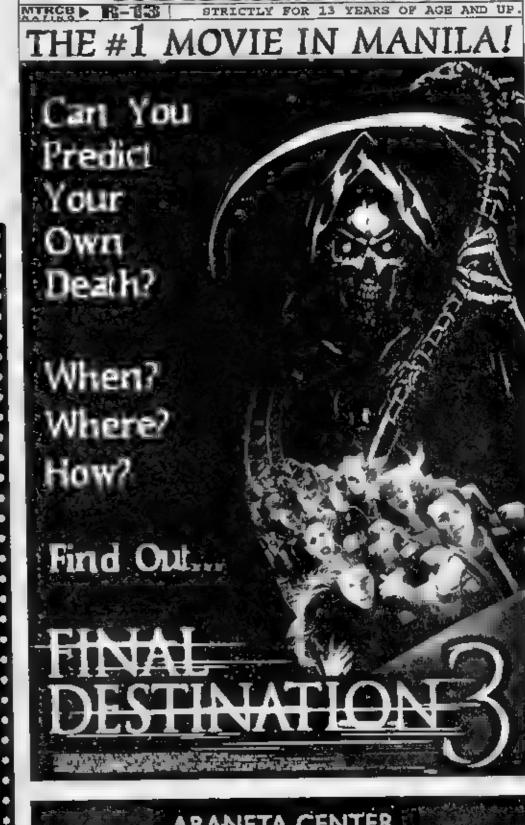

"This deal will deliver value to our partners and advertisers who need to communicate their marketing messages," said Madrid in a

CUBE Interactive vice president Jay Adevoso said the partnership reflects the adoption of a content convergence strategy by both Filipino-American dancing partner of 98 Degrees' Drew Lachey in "Dancing with" the Stars" which climaxes Sunday right (Monday noon in Manila) may not speak Tagalog but, she quipped, "I can definitely understand it when my Mom starts talking about me."

and show off their natural rhythm." Cheryl has the genes of a mother who is an amateur ballroom dancing competitor and a maternal lole who zealously taught folk dances as a PE teacher in Nueva Ecija. Cheryl remembered immediately liking ballet at age four, "from day one." When I asked the New York-based (but Bay Area-raised) bailroom dancing champion if she got a chance to talk with George Hamilton, one of the show's contestants, about his dancing days with former First Lady Imelda Marcos, she replied in the negative. "George was so focused on Stacy [Keibler, one of the finalists]," Cheryl said.

Neither was she able to talk often with her feliow Fil-Am, actress Tia Carrere, who was earlier voted off.

Cheryl confessed that she did not know much about Drew or 98 Degrees before they were paired up for the show, Now, after going through hundreds of hours of rehearsals and dancing together all the way to the finals, the two are "close friends for life."

While the pair has wowed the on-set judges and viewers who vote online and by phone with their tango (a perfect 30) and paso doble, Cheryl's favorite dance with Drew was the Jive. Many consider wrestler Stacy Keibler and Tony Dovolani as Cheryl and Drew's closest rival for the top prize The other team is football's Jerry Rice and Anna Trabunskaya

As we write, Cheryl and Drew scored perfect scores with the judges Thursday evening so they look good as they go into the Sunday finals. Message boards were abuzz with raves about the duo's cowboy dance, especia.ly Cheryl's choreography. Audience votes Thursday will make up 50 percent in the final determination of the winners while the judges' vote on both Thursday and Sunday will count for the other 50 percent.

On its second season, "Dancing with the Stars" proved to have durable appeal. The show, fondly called by its acronym "DWTS" by followers, attracts as many as 20 million viewers each episode and even beats the popular "Survivor" in the rat-

Cheryl intends to visit the Philippines soon, "I want to personally thank Filipinos everywhere who voted and supported us," she declared, Experiencing the culture and the unmatched Filipino hospitality. I think they consider me as American in the international dance world. In this field, heritage sometimes doesn't marter unless you're Russian. The stereotype Russians are "hungry" in that they really have the drive to do well.

You wrote once that Drew never gets nervous but you do. How does he make you comfort-

98 Degrees? We work on it week by week. Dancing is all about muscle memory. The more you do a certain move, the more it gets memorized by your muscle. While Lea has not done much choreography in a while (she is eight months pregnant), I try and get her opinion every once in a while on what tooks good for Drew and me.

Why do you think that you and Drew did very well as a dancing couple?

From Day One, Drew has always wanted to win and has put in all the necessary work. More important, our chemistry on the floor contributes highly to our success.

Mostly new or 'snubbed' actors on the Oscar list

LOS ANGELES-NEARLY THREE QUARters of the actors nominated for the 2006 Academy Awards are Hodywood newcorners or hugely popular stars who were previously snubbed by Oscar despite their b box office triumphs.

Of the 20 actors competing for the four acting statuettes this year, 14 are firsttime nominees while six have previously competed for cinemas highest honors which will be handed out on March 5 in Hollywood.

"There are a lot of new faces at the Oscars this year, many of them people who paid their dues over the years with many roles and many films," Gusesh Pandya, founder of the movie website Boxofficeguru.com, told AFP

Among the new names to win recognition from the 5,800 Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences voters are Terrence Howard, nominated as Best Actor for "Hustle and Flow," and real newcomer Briton Keira Knightiey, Best Actress nominee for "Pride and Prejudice" at the tenderage of 20

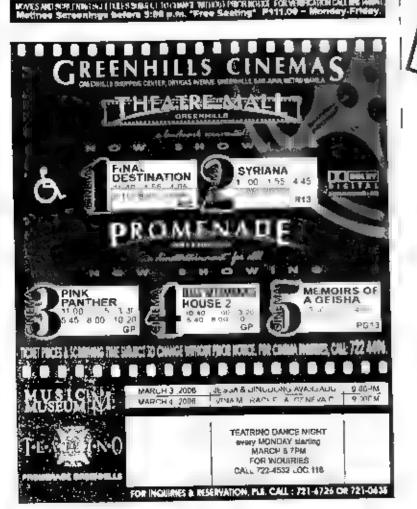

Youthful arrivals

Other youthful new arrivals include Army Adams, 26, nominated as Best Supporting Actress in "Junebug," and Britain's Rachel Weisz, 34, Best Supporting Actress contender for the thriber "The Constant Gardner." Only four of this year's nommees for best leading and best supporting roles-10 actors and 10 ac-tresses in all-already boast Oscars on their mantelpeices.

They are four-time nominees William Hurt, Frances McDormand and British Dame Judi Dench, who won Oscars in be

"Brokeback Mountain" heads into the Oscars as the favorite to win Best Picture and Best Director for Ang Lee.

A four-time nominee and Best Actress winner for Fargo, McDormand is a sturdy, resilient presence in "North Country," in which she plays a miner suffering from a debilitating neurological disorder.

Likewise, Keener, a past nominee for "Being John Malkovich," is a solid embodiment of "To Kill a Mockingburd" author Harper Lee in "Capote," aiding her hielong pal Truman Capote in his initial research for the true-crime novel "In Cold Blood "

Neither Keener's nor McDormand's roles are the sort that scream Oscar, though, making them long shots against the flashier performances of Weisz and Williams.

First-time nommee Adams has a substantial list of credits behind her, but mostly in smaller roles, so she comes to the Oscars looking like this year's out-of-the-blue newcomer.

In 'Junebug," Adams is a breath of pure freshness as a wide-eyed sweetheart of a Southern gal entranced by her husband's worldly new sister in law. The role earned Adams an acting prize at last year's Sundance Film Festival.

Manilow immersed himself in pop radio, he was an unknown singer-songwriter looking for his first hit with a song called "Mandy"-a tune he wasn't too thrilled about.

So he decided to check out what the competition had to offer

"I turned the radio on and heard 'Kung Pu Fighting' and 'Disco Duck," said Manilow, laughing. "I said, These people need me? And that was my first entrance into pop music."

Now, some three decades later, Manilow, still disenchanted with popradio, finds himself needed again. But instead of coming to the rescue of listeners with the sentimental, semi-schmaltzy ballads that made him famous, he has returned with "The Greatest Songs of the Fifties"-an Arista Records collection of classic romantic tunes, including revered songs like Elvis Presley's "Are You Lonesome Tonight" and the album's first single, "Uncha.ned Melody."

Frustration

"I think if 'Unchained Melody' does what I think it can do, I think there is an audience out there that would heave a sigh of relief— that finally, there is a melody, and orchestration, production, and a vocalist that is giving them a song that they can just listen to... and not be annoyed by the vocal acrobat ics that vocalists seem to think is impressive," said Manilow, with a hint of frustration in his voice.

So far, fans are demonstrating their relief not by sighing, but by racing to

"For him to do the great songs of the '50s and for the public to respond in that way, it's just phenomenal," said record mogul Clive Davis, Manilow's former mentor and a producer of his latest album. "The stores have just been running out of

"When I began to get into music and actually find myself connecting to music, it wasn't those songs. It wasn't the '50s. It was the generation before the '50s, the Ella Pitzgeralds and the Sinatras and the writers like Johany Mercer."

But he decided to give the idea consideration simply because Davis suggested it. After all, it was Davis who first made Manilow a star, signing him to his new Arista label 31 years ago and pushing him to record the No. 1 hlt song "Mandy."

No 'returnee' is competing in Bb Pilipinas 2006—there are only new faces—the first time in many years

Formidable, competitive

By Armin Adina

FOR THE FIRST TIME IN MANY YEARS, NO "returnee" is competing in the Bimbining Pir pinas pageant.

It seems nobody was willing, just yet, to follow in the footsteps of Miss International Precious Lara Quigaman, herseif a two-time pageant participant

Fresh faces, 24 of them, studded Friday's press presentation of official candidates at the Gateway Mall in Araneta Center, Cubao, Quezon City.

The formidable batch of newbies include University of the Philippines political science graduate La Andrea Ramos, 25, who has stirred some interest even before she was named a candidate

Ramos has had to clarify rumors that she is based in the United States and working for the United Nations. "That's not true," she insisted. "I'm based in the Philippines. Eve been working with the Asia Foundation for over two years."

Other lookers are: Interior design student Mary Pilar de Gorostiza, 21, and Marie Ann Umali, 19, a dead ringer for actress Francine Prieto, Entrepreneur, Dentile, Lou, Va. monte 24, stood out for her glowing dusky; camples on and killer curves; Mylene Maligaya claimed the stage with her very sexy poses.

Foreign blood

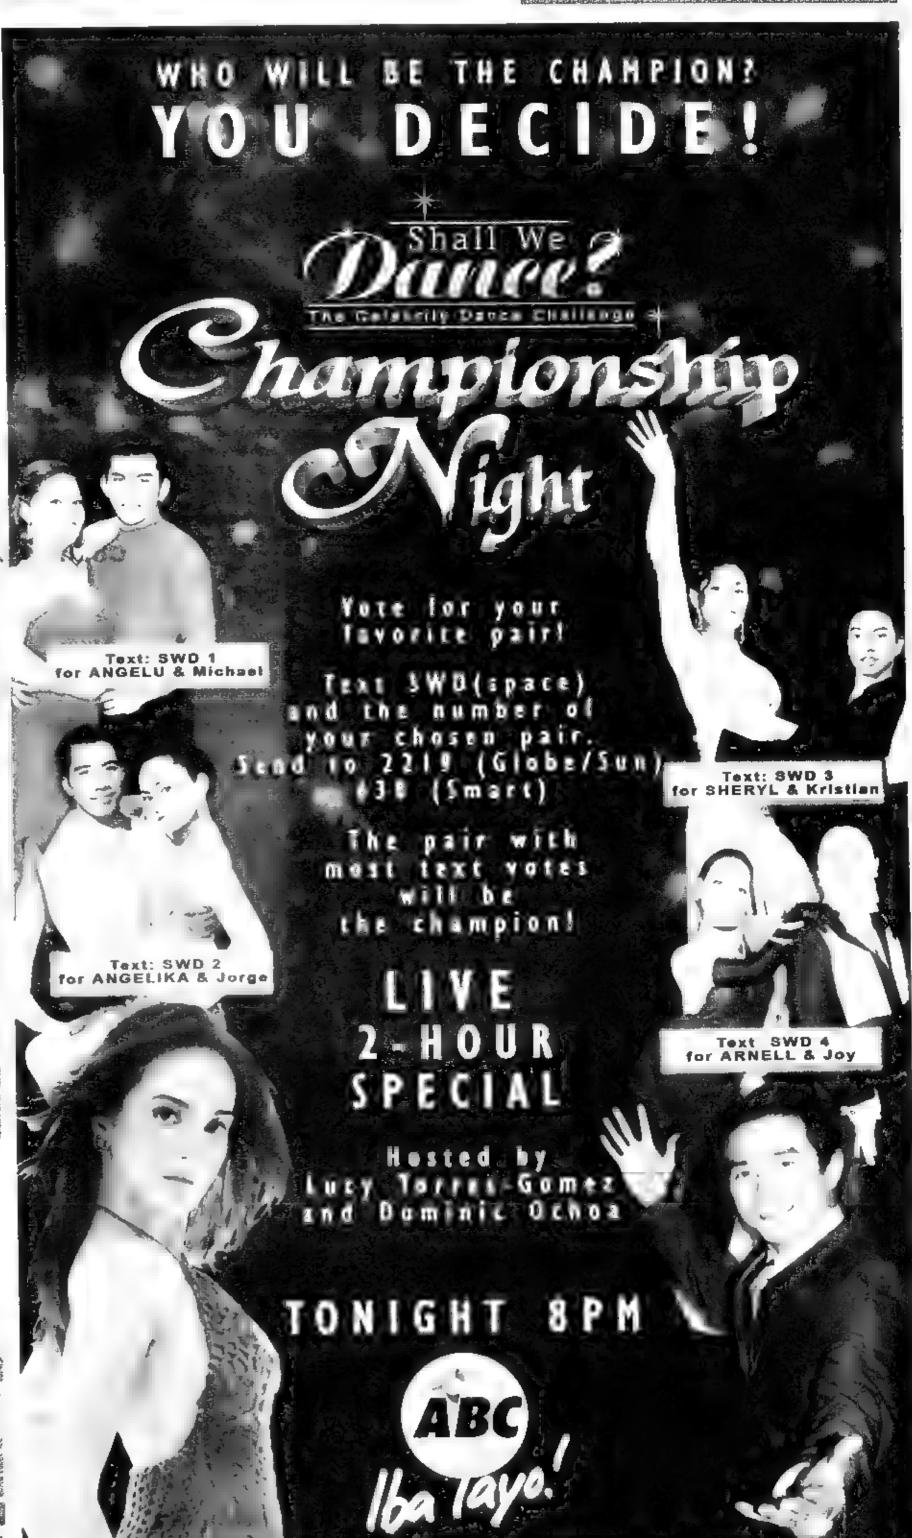

A handful of girls are of foreign ancestry—Vanessa Kibanoff, Meral Ates, Caroline Yorke and Vera Rieter And there's a dash of veterans from other pageants—Miss Fort Ikocandia Fiona Marie Lava, also a Miss Philippines-Earth semifinalist and Mutya ng Pilipinas runner up; and Boholana beauty titlist Ana Maris Igpit.

"This batch is very competitive!" exclaimed outgoing queen Gionna Cabrera, Miss Photogenic in the 2005 Miss Universe pageant. "We may win another international crown," said Carlene Aguilar, 2005 Miss World semifinalist.

Earlier, two "voluntarily withdrew" from the contest. Bb. Pilipinas project director Ernesto Roca said German-born Mayumi Keller has yet to acquire dual citizenship, while Aeesha Rand could not get out of a prior commitment

The pageant is set on March 4, 7:30 p.m with a delayed telecast at 9 p.m. over GMA 7. Station executive Bang Arespacochaga said there will be little changes in the program. Dingdong Dantes will share hosting chores with Dennis Trillo and P.a Guanio.

Actress I WENT ON MY OWN BECAUSE my daughter refused to accompany me. But she followed me in her car to the gate of our subdivision in Alabang. She dropped me off in Guadalupe, where I started my trek to Camp Crame.

I later met up with the group of Leo Martinez, Laurice Guillen, Johnny Delgado and Peria Bautista and that right we kept vigil in Libis-White Plains-Blue Ridge. The following morning we had breakfast in Leo's apartment and I hitched a ride with strangers back to Alabang.

Would I do it again? Oh, yes! But for a good cause. Even though I am not as strong now as t was then, I'd still do it. But I know that the notion of People Power has changed somehow. In 1986, everyone was united—socialities and the masses, students and artists. We were all there.

Joey Reyes

Director

At the old Channel 4 (now, the ABS-CBN compound), my best friend Manny Castañeda and 1 were assigned to the newsroom! There we were, two sitcom writers, manning the telefax machines and, later, the telephones.

Fremember seeing Quezon Avenue deserted for the first time in my life. So Manny and I played "skippity hop" on the bighway. We were having a ball until someone shouted that there were snipers in the [television] towers.

When it was confirmed that the Marcoses had fied, we were on the rooftop of the studio, crying and singing "Bayan Ko." It was a celebration!

Would I do it again? I've done it twice already! I was in the front lines of Edsa II. I read Bishop Soc Villegas' story in the INQUIRER and I agree with him completely. We have raped the notion of People Power, its purity has been lost. It has become the tool of politicians, I won't do it for the present clowns that are running the government. We should analyze the events of Edsa II and III and see them for what they really were. Would I go back to Edsa? The stress and the pollution are bad for my skint

Tessie Tomas

Comedienne

My brothers and I were among the first to arrive in Camp Crame. Later, I went to Channel 4, where I was assigned to the kitchen with [the late singer] Paola Luz.

The scariest part was when we heard rumors that Marcos troops would bomb the studio. At that time, I was with my 10-year-old son Robin. But I was glad he was with me. He later told me that, because he had witnessed it, he

Leo Martinez

Director general, Film Academy of the Philippines

We were supposed to have a forum with Dong Puno at the Actors' Workshop headquarters. We cancelled it and decided as a group that the order of the day was to go to Edsa! We were only a few then. Most show biz folks were for Marcos. We went carrying the yellow flag of the Actors' Workshop Foundation.

Since there were too many people in Channel 4, I decided to keep vigil near Crame Instead. No-teargas komt do'n. I distinctly remember the rhythm of the soldiers' footsteps. Boom-boomboom! It was in Libis. It's a flyover

When Nora Aunor arrived in Crame, she was booed by the crowd [because she had campaigned for Marcos]. Johnny Delgado rushed to embrace and

Would I do it again? Oh yes! It was scary, but we felt proud at the should be for a compelling reason. Definitely, I wouldn't do it for a politico. I am still waiting for that day when Filipinos will rise, united, again

We all got goosebumps singing "Bayan Ko." Ipaglaban natin ang ating kultura—ang pamana ng ating kagalingan at karangalan (We should fight for our culture-the legacy of our greatness and integrity)."

Mitch Valdes

Singer-comedienne

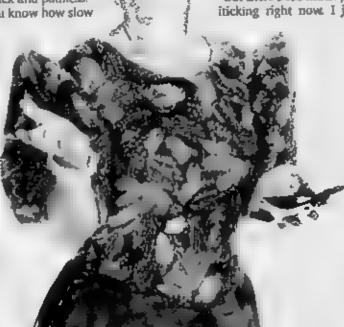

My job during that whole time was to pick up surrendering soldiers from different safe houses and take them to Crame and Aguinaldol I was a courier service and diplomat combined. To think my Nissan Stanza was brand-new and I had not paid for it!

I also snauggled in film for the embedded television crew in Crame. We put the stuff under loaves of bread.

I was in New York at the time people gathered on Edsa in 1986. But I was very much part of the events that led to Edsa I. I had previously led railies in many parts of Manila

While I was in New York, I took charge of mass actions, too. For a time, my husband (Carlitos Siguion Reyna) and I guarded the Marcos home on East 66th Street. I remember that while I was there, I received a call from someone looking for Carlitos. The caller said Carlitos' uncle, Juan Ponce Enrile, had led a breakaway faction in Manila.

Would I do it again? My doctor called me this morning. She didn't allow me to go to Edsa. Pinangunahan na ako. (Bibeth was diagnosed with breast cancer same time. Given the chance, I'd in November 2004.) Carlitos is march on the streets again. But it there right now (at press time on Friday) I'm very proud of him. It has always been my dream to marry an activist. I actually prayed for it.

Carlitos said he felt so meffective when he was in New York while things were happening here. Now, he got his wish. I see him on television, standing beside former vice president (Teofisto) Guingona. He's the representative of the family.

Stage director, columnist I was at Edsa as a member of a protest group that included Lino Brocka. The group monitored the broadcast of Radio Veritas, I would do it again but only if there's "real" People Power and not just a movement instigated by people in politics. Actor, director

Of course I'd do it again. It made a great deal of difference. What we did affected the history of the world, Because of People Power in Edsa, the Berlin Was fell and Communism in Eastern Europe crumbled. They had something like that in Poland, too. We were the impetus that led to mose changes.

BUSINESS, GOVERNMENT AND NGOs are not the only sectors focusing on the OFWs and their families. The Catholic Church has also actively pursued a pastoral care program for this segment that, according to the World Banks Global Economic Report, sends $11.6 billion each year, equivalent to 13.5 percent of the Philippines' gross domestic product.

A major project that impacts on the pught of the migrant families is the National Migrants Sunday organized by the Batangas Archdiocese on March 4 and 5, 2006.

Archbishop Ramon Arguelles says 60 percent of the social ills in Batangas are a result of nugration. Dysfunctional families reflect affected husband and wife relationships as well as those with children. Asian lastitute of Management Policy Center Executive Director, Federico Macaranas, attests to this breakdown of family ties as biggest allocation of P5,000 goes one of the costs of migration.

Another concern is the relocation costs compromising future earnings due to debt payments. Consultancy firm Systemat-Prodex recently conducted a survey in Batangas for a corporate social responsibility program on enterprise development and saw OFWs going into debt when they pay placement fees as high as With P500 going to savings, the

The family spends P15,700 out of a monthly remittance of P20,000, which is net of the hidugan for the placement fee. The

The family recently started a small business, taking care of "45-day manok" which is sold in the market. This would add to her other incomes that total about P40,000 annually. Quite a bonus for turning a portion of the funds to productive uses.

OFW spending

In a study, Dr. Roberto de Vera

THE CATHOLIC Church is pursuing a pastoral care program for OFWs who send in about $12 billion to the local economy every year.

of the University of Asia and the Pacific (UA&P) said that OPW families spent as much as P80 billion last year on discretionary items. He added that OFW families earning PS0,000 to P99,000 study that companies should annually, outside of their remittances received, spend an average of P49,000 on discretionary goods. This is similar to the case of the previously cited Mabian, Batangas family who has P40,000 to P50,000 income outside of remittances received and can afford discretionary spending of about P60,000 annually.

It can be inferred from the come out and service the more essential needs of the OFW market as in the case of a seaman's wife who allocates 30 percent of a $960 monthly remittance for an educational plan, or of the husband of an OFW in Italy who has been buying property to secure the future.

Building a network of young envoys to save the environment

By Corrie Salientes-Narisma

been part of Bayer AG's corporate existence. It invests time, effort and money to strike a balance between ensuring it lives up to its commitment to protect the environment while doing good business

"Environmental protection should be advanced across generations and national boundaries," stated Bayer management board chair Werner Wenning

Thus, it has made another commitment-to share this passion with the youth and ensure that it is passed on from one gencration to another across the globe

The Bayer Young Environmental Envoy Program fulfills this commitment by creating awareness among the youth about protecting mother nature, getting the youth to assume greater ownership of their environment.

The BYEE Program builds a global network of young ambassadors for the environment.

The yearly program, now done in collaboration with the United Nations Environment Program, started in Thailand almost 10 years ago. In its early years, only a handful of youth delegates from four Asian countries—the Philippines, Thailand, Singapore and ind.a-were sent to the Bayer headquarters in Leverkusen, Germany for a week-long exposure tour. The tour is the culmination of months of the program's implementation-from the search of candidates to the selection of the finalists to an environment project competition and, eventually, of the young delegates who will be sent to Germany.

It did not take long before the number of the participants grew. For 2005, the BYER Leverkusen tour was participated by 45 young ambassadors from 14 countries.

Por the 2005 BYEE Program, the Philippines sent John Rex N. Jardinero, a second year BS Environmental Science student of Palawan State University; Ryan Anthony B. Bucat, a third year BS Medical Technology student of Lorana Colleges in La Union; Criselle V. Bautista, a semor Management Engineering student of Ateneo de Manila University; Jeffrey P. Mora, who has just obtained SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT HAS LONG his BS Chemistry degree from Par Eastern University, and Lester Louis L. Lopez, a veterinary medicine graduate from UR Los Banos.

John Rex, Ryan, Jeffrey, Lester, Criscile and the 40 other students from other countries were selected from among thousands of applicants.

John Rex is involved in mangrove rehabilitation efforts covering a dozen coastal barangays in Puerto Princesa, Palawan. He realized early on that in projects of this proportion, networking is a key element. Thus, even before the BYEE Program, he has already been very active in organizing youth groups. His Young Earth Savers Network has the following core programs: The HS Students Pellowship for the Environment, a basic eco camping program for highs school students; Save the Ignored Youths to Save the Earth for elementary students; Council of Young Leaders for the Environment, which takes care of policies and programs, and the Out of School Youth Fellowship for Nature.

He says the BYEE Program made him realize that there are many other young people who share his possion for the environment. From the time Bayer started its search for young envoys, networking in and out his community has already started, he says. The trip to Germany gave him a perspective on how big the network can become.

After seeing during that trip proofs that things can be done to save and protect the environment, John Rex is preparing himself for bigger things that, he believes, he can easily handle with the help of his BYEE network.

The BYEE network also works well for Ryan and his environmental projects. "With the network we have, youth environmentalists here and overseas can now share our respective experiences and ideas," he says.

Through the local network of envoys, Ryan

Goodbye dollars, hello euros

By Doris C. Dumlao

PABLO YAMBOT, A YUPPIE IN HIS EARLY 30s, has long wanted to convert a portion of his savings in curos or in financial instruments denominated in Europe's unified cur-

This systems manager for global business services at Procter & Gamble Asia Pte. Ltd. isn't really an active portfolio investor but he's well-read, well-travelled, fairly attuned to global financial trends and has excess cash outside of his household's cookie jar. His interest was kindled upon noticing that the US dollar has been weakening against major global currencies while the euro has held its ground.

Yambot's mindset reflects what many cesttral banks across the globe are now doing-shifting some of their foreign reserves to euros. And there's an increasing supply of high-yielding securities in this currency as many emerging markets, including the Philippines, have issued new euro-denominated bonds primarily to diversify their currency nisks.

In the past, it wouldn't have been easy for a domestic retail investor like Yambot to find a euro-denominated financial instrument that would earn more than what's offered by foreign currency deposit units or dollar accounts. For instance, the Philippine government sold 500 million euro bonds early this year (as part of a $2.1-billion fresh global bond foray) and Yambor would have eagerly bought some if he had the chance.

The Ayalas' Bank of the Philippine Islands now makes it possible for resident investors tu participate in a fund that invests in those curo-denominated securities. Its ALFM Euro Bond Fund, created in March last year but offered to the public only recently, is the Philippines' first and only mutual fund denominated in euros.

Bernardo, chair of the ALFM Euro Bond.

European Union's Ambassador to the Philippines Jan De Kok who graced the new fund's launch says the euro, introduced in 1999 only as a paper currency, has gone past birth pains to emerge as a major global cur-

"This fund is yet another confirmation that the euro has arrived in the Philippines," De

Euro banknotes and coms have been in circulation since January 2002 and are now a part of daily life for over 300 million Europeans living in the eurozone, being the single currency used by 12 European Union countries: Belgium, Germany, Greece, Spain, France, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Austria, Portugal and Finland

"It's an alternative for investors to allow them to spread their risk and therefore reduce their losses and increase their gams with another international currency, the euro," De Kok notes with pride

"The economic fundamentals in the eurozone have gotten better and better and that shall underpin the strength of the euro, allowing investors to make larger profits while having to take less risks," he says.

A mutual fund is an investment entity that pools shareholder or unitholder funds and invests them in various securities. The units or shares are redeemable by the fund on demand by the investor. The value of the underlying assets of the fund influences the current

In the case of the ALFM Euro, about 98 percent is currently invested in Philippine eurodenominated sovereign bonds but the mutual fund plans to shift a portion to other Asian sovereign debt issues.

"The euro has come of age," says Romeo tightening cycle in the United States, is providing a good opportunity for bond investors. In 2005, for instance, the ALFM Eurobond

Fund had outperformed US bonds. Sison says the euro has more room to appreciate this year, providing investors in eurodenominated assets with opportunity to lock in further gains. The mutual fund is benchmarked against one-year German Treasury bills and has likewise overperformed it so far this year. From year to date, ALFM Buro has posted an annualized return of 9.17 percent versus the 2.72 percent from the comparative German treasury. For the past 30 days, it has yielded 3.53 percent versus the 2.47 percent German benchmark.

The ALFM Euro aims for steady income with returns and inflows derived out of investments in primarily foreign currency-denominated instruments and securities issued by local and foreign entities, with its base currency in euros.

Minimum investment in the new mutual fund is 1,000 euros while minimum additional investment is 200 euros. It is distributed by BPI Capital Corp., BPI Securities Corp. and BPI Investment Management Inc. This year, ALFM Euro is targeted to grow its size by about 20 percent, leveraging on BPI's leadership in the country's growing mutual fund

BPI officials say the mutual fund will also target European expats in the Philippines with excess euros which are kept only in bank deposits and would like to invest in Philippine euro-denominated debt papers.

ganization in Northern Luzon, called the Green Flame Alliance, which aimed to encourage more young people to getting involved in environmental projects. Like John Rex, Ryan is also into mangrove rehabilitation and reforestation.

Ryan is preparing for the launching of another project, "Oplan Baterya," a campaign that calls for the proper disposal of vehicle

Twenty-one year-old Ryan has been involved in community work for years now. As a Red Cross volunteer for seven years, he saw for himself the ill effects of pollution, the illnesses caused by lack of sanitation and improper waste disposal. This experience prompted this med tech student to volunteer his services to the Department of Environment and Natural Resources as a youth counterpart of the agency's regional technical directors. He thought it was better to address the root of the problem than the effects of it.

"I keep in touch with my fellow envoys here and in other countries, particularly those from India and Indonesia. We exchange ideas and experiences concerning our environmental involvements and of course, we keep in touch as friends," he says.

Lester

His work as a veterinary doctor is no hindrance to Lester's mission to protect the wildlife and help address the problem of environmental degradation through MyZoo, a wildlife conservation NGO composed of young environmentalist volunteers.

With animal health care and education as his expertise, Lester handles MyZoo's community service program and he serves as lead coordinator in various programs of the group.

His BYEE experience, he said, exposed him to the many possibilities he saw in Germany and in the experiences shared by the other envoys that MyZoo could replicate and localize to suit the country's needs. And his BYEE network makes this experience-sharing a contin-

Establishing links with local communities, concerned groups and government agencies is the very essence of his group's work at My-Zoo, which aims to awaken the consciousness of the general public on the plight of Mother Nature, MyZoo holds educational programs and fora on different topics about the environment. It helps transform Philippine zoos into effective learning institutions that inspire action toward conservation of biodiversity. It also helps in campaigns against animal smuggling and trafficking.

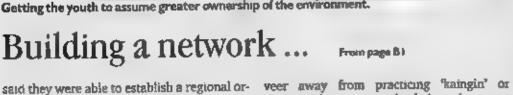

Jeffrey

Jeffrey believes that the steady deterioration of environmental conditions was a result not only of direct assaults to the environment-such as the indiscriminate cutting of trees, illegal fishing and amoke belching-but also of the density of the population particularly in informal settlement areas or the siums. He said government agencies, local government units, business, industry and civil society should put a premuum on housing program. For his contribution to the improvement of the living conditions of highly populated communities, he spearheaded the FEU Central Student Organization Pabahay Project which, through a partnership with Gawad Kalinga, aims to rehabilitate an informal settement area in Quezon City. Jeffrey recently joined the workforce after earning his degree from the FEU but the project he started, turned over to the student council, continues. His work did not stop him from pursuing his dream of a slum-free world. He recently helped form another NGO group, Volunteers for Change, which is adopting a community in Rizal. Apart from rehabilitating the community, Jeffrey's group will form a cooperative and introduce livelihood projects that seek to encourage residents of the area to BEING STOOD UP IS perhaps as old as time itself, but how we react to it certainly reveals a lot about our age and the generation we belong to. And if a generation consists of 20 years, then people like myself who finished high school in the early 1980s are perhaps twice as dated in their ways as those who came of age in the new millennium.

"For example, when was the last time you heard a person chide someone for being extremely late? "Namuta na ang mga mata ka, wala ka pa!"

Or how many times have you used the word "Indian" in vain—"Bakit mo naman aka in-Indian?"—never mind if Indians had nothing to do with your friend failing to show up?

Apart from sounding so dated, such lines seem so unthinkable in an age when cell phones and text messaging have become as indispensable as owning a toothbrush and brushing one's teeth.

These days, if the friend you're supposed to meet is a few minutes late, you simply text him or her to "make paramdam." If he or she doesn't text back, you give him or her a call If for some reason you weren't able to connect, "you can text again to tell him or her not to bother anymore because you're going home.

Of course, you may opt to give that "Indian" of a person a piece of your mind—again via text. It's really that simple

It may seem surprising nowadays even to most people my age, but in our day, you stayed put and waited for a date no matter how tardy he/she was because you had no way of contacting each other. Instant communication had yet to be invented.

Pontifical University

And as former University of Santa Tomas (UST) High School students, who spent our salad days learning about love, life and various stuff in-between from 1977 to 1981, we had coped with all of the above "dated" expenences firsthand.

Apart from standing by our promise to show up on time, back then we had to specify and agree on where exactly we intended to meet.

Would it be inside or outside National Bookstore? In front of Ali Mall Cinema 1, 2, 3 or 4? The ladies' or the men's section of Cinderella? Under or over Quezon (okay, Quiapo) Bridge? Pairure to do so could spell disaster

The stuff kids today take for granted was the very stuff we held dearly when we were younger. And these included (hopefully, still includes) our ability to speak English property and in complete sentences (thanks to the evening news delivered in formal English and to "TV Times," without a doubt our generation's weekly entertainment bible) and spell words correctly without resorting to electronic dictionaries and appreviations.

Not that we didn't get the hang of doing the latter now that our near-arthritic fingers (ouch!) and dimming visions have become so used to "texting." Bow, dut to think this gr8?! ;-)

We didn't need cell phones to be fashionable then. Not a few of us were already budding fashionistas back then when Calvin Klein was more than just a borde of his and hers perfume, Gloria Vanderbilt was no mere American socialite, "boho" chic was known as "folkoric," monk shoes had nothing to do with monks and Crayons were something you slipped on and laced up, not coloring tools.

Proto-mallers

Yes, we were able to ride the first wave of the mail culture via such pioneer establishments as Ali Mall and Harrison Plaza. In those halcyon days, the now-defunct brands such as Azabache, Jazzie, Borsalino and Therese were the era's must haves.

The place to shop was either on Zurbaran in Sta. Cruz or Cartimar in Pasay, where you got all the imported and "orig" stuff—from Ace bags to Sergio Valente jeans, Happy Feet bakya to Hang Ten slippers, Charlie to Ansis, Anais perfume, Sony cassette players to Sony Walkmans, and hoodie jackets to skateboards.

Speaking of skateboards, some of us dared to risk life and limb and rode those wheeled contraptions in a vain attempt to copy Jill Muntoe's death-delying moves. Those who weren't brave enough simply had to content themselves by combing and twirling their hair into a flip a la Jili's trademark tresses.

Marissa Andal's ongoing mixedmedia art exhibit at Rustan's Makati proves there's more to her than designing the J.Lo bag'

ARISSA ANDAL LAUGHED in resignation when she realized that, yes, she's probably never going to live down that like it or not, the bag made of tree bark toted by the Hollywood superstar throughout the 2002 romantic flick "Maid in Manhattan" is now inextricably linked to the renown of its designer, even as Andal is transitioning into oth er art forms.

But at the opening of her fiber and mixed-media art exhibit, "Fragrance of Art," at Rustan's Makati last week, the jovial Andal made it known that that evening wouldn't be about her bags.

"I just had two brain surgeries, did you know?" she asked, smiling, which made one suspect she was just joking. Her high spirits belied any trace of recent illness, real or imagined.

Andal, in fact, had a brain tumor that required two surgeries in late

"It was in my pineal area, my third eye," she explained. "[When the tumor was removed] I started seeing all these shapes and colors sporadically. [The tumor] was blocking my third eye! [had to let it out. I started doing sketches nonstop."

Her recuperation period would be spent not in her sick bed but at the drawing board.

Sturming

inspired by Therry

Mugler

Andal's sketches would later take the shape of srunning fiber wall art pieces, made of the same natural materialsraffia, wicker, feathers, wood, coco shell—as her popular export bags and home accessories. As early as January last year, barely four months postsurgery Andal had sold her first fiber art pieces to Italian buyers. The artist was encouraged

Not long after, Andal would exhibit her artworks in various venues-from ber Bicol hometown to Greenbelt in Makati in November, where she showed (and sold) 80 mural-size pieces to buyers from Japan and the United States. Her US clients, from Sta-Pe, New Mexico, and Dallas, Texas, will exhibit Andal's works there later this year. A similar exhibit is also slated in France in September Andal's show on the ground floor of Rustan's Makau, to run antil the end of Rebruary, is presented by Rustan's Essenses, the department store's cosmetics and toiletries division, as one of its projects to promote Filipino artists, and Essenses Foundation, which supports various women's causes.

Part of the proceeds from the sales of Andal's art will benefit the programs of the foundation. Purchase of each artwork comes with a bottle of the scent which inspired it.

The artist was tasked to create threedimensional artworks inspired by scents. Rustan's sent her up to 80 summer scents for inspiration, and Andal went into overdrive.

"I didn't even need to smell the perfumes; the boxes they came in were enough to inspire me!" Andal said, elated. She came up with $7 pieces. "I'm inspired by... the totality of the perfume."

Welcome change

Truth is, said Andal, the woven art pieces were inspired not only by the heady scents of perfume.

"It was love, too!" she said giggling. I always said I didn't want to get married. I was a ways busy, always traveling. But after my ordeal, I realized. I wanted to settle down. When I said that to myself, suitors suddenly came knock.ng... '

In June, Andal will wed her beau, a dentist. "You see, things fell into place after I got sick. I'm so blessed."

Her shift from designer-exporter to artist has been a wescome change for Andal, "It has been very relaxing. I create according to my mood. I've been quite prolific," she shared. But unlike designing bags, "I'm not thinking I have to sell 100 pieces of this."

Which isn't saying she's not been selling just as many pieces of her fiber art. In fact, her foreign buyers, several of whom were at the Rustan's opening. have been buying her artworks by the containers-ful, or up to 100 pieces

Andal, however, msists her bag designs differ from her fiber art "A piece of art is a piece of you... My [goai] now is how to expand it more, how to reach more people and tap other countries."

As for the J.Lo bag, "I really won't be able to live that down," she admitted. It got so much press It wasn't my only bag that was used in [Ho.lywood] movies... but, no, I don't mind at all."

I don't have the courage to tell her. We had a fight and did not talk to each other houself cure for almost a year. I thought that would cure me of my feelings but I was wrong.

Her former boyfriend got her pregnant then left her for another girl. When we patched up our differences we became super close again, as if nothing happened. Though I am more in control of my feelings now, I get so jealous when she and her exboyfriend communicate. The ex-boyfriend is my officemate.

Why did God let me and my friend become close again when I've prayed to Him to take away the feelings I have for this girl? Does He want me to commit a sinful act? I know it is not a sin to love, but loving the wrong person is.

f am about to tell her the truth but I worry about two things. First, she'll understand but will no longer want to be my friend because of my feelings for her. Second, we might end up being lovers.

If you tell me to see other people, I have already done that If you tell me to bury myself in extracurricular activities, I've done that, too. What I haven't done is surrender myself to God. My faith in Him is fading. I still believe in Him but I am having doubts about my faith and that makes me angrier with myself.

I'll welcome your harsh words just to ease my pain.

DUMBFOUNDED

Why do many people—you included—think there is this God who's constantly hiding behind bushes ready to jump on same-sex "offenders" and sentence them to eterna, damnation? Who created this pea-brained, unforgiving, malicious, dirty-minded God? Where do you find him? Get his cell phone number and i'll talk to him directly.

I don't know about your God, but my God has the intelligence, understanding and knowledge no one among us can begin to fathom! Not in a million years!

And He has better things to do than tap His finger on His cheek and think of ways to frighten people and riddle them with guilt!

You're a girl in love with another girl. Big deal! And so what? Love is love, Let's not put other labels on it. Life is already difficult as it is. The world is getting dimmer with our bigotry, prejudice, fanaticism, narrow-mindedness, and here you are trying to put out the little flicker of light that is making your life a bit tolerable.

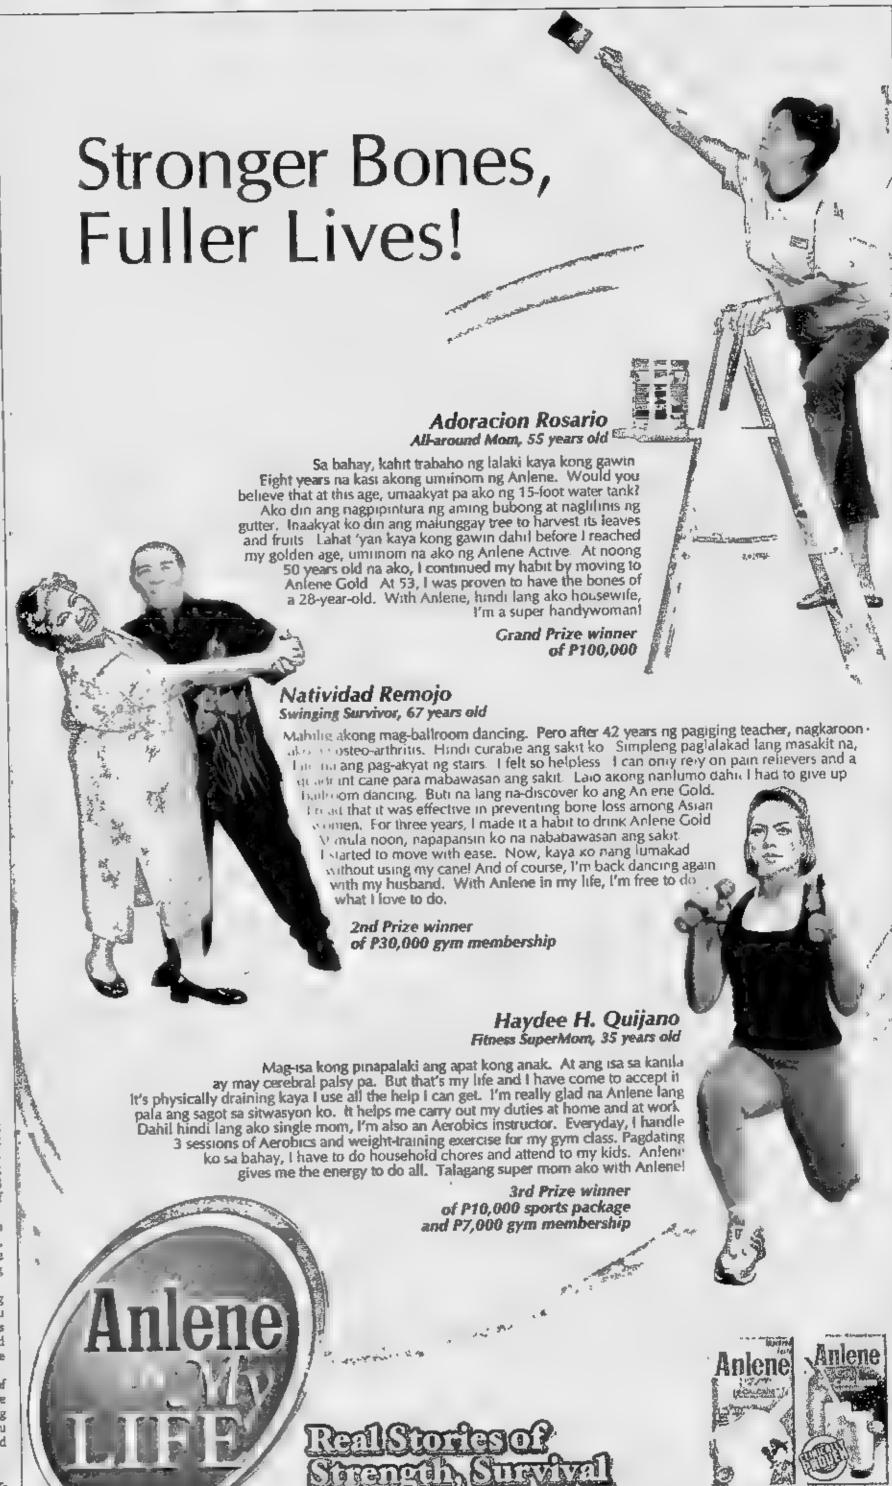

If your Catholicism is drenching you with guilt, then forget this guil. But you're single, she's single, and if there's nobody else in the horizon that you are planning to put in misery, what's the problem?

Tell her how you feel and don't make a song and dance about it. If she consents to love you back—great! If she hems and haws then she's probably not late you and it will do you no good to pursue her when her mind is somewhere else. Let it rest for a while.

The important thing is for you to get it out of your chest and be done with it. And while you're at it, leave God out of it. He's too busy minding stuff we mortals can't solve. This, my dear, you can hack yourself. Get it out, get it done and move on. Life is toood short to be miserable.

Back when we were 'bagets'

Jill who? Come on, she can't be that easy to forget. Dubbed as the sexiest angel with her big hair and toothy grin, she was pan-up girl Farrah Fawcett's alter ego in the hit TV series, "Charlie's Angels." For a variety of reasons, Pawcett and co-stars Kate Jackson and Jaclyn Smith became every high school lod's fantasy back in the late 1970s, whether he or she was straight or somewhere in-between.

"Little House on the Prairie," "Dance Rever," and other "free" TV shows spiced up our Saturday evenings, MTV, DVDs, iPods, cable TV, "Brokeback Mountain" and "Desperare Housewives" were then like light years away. Sigh.

Anime freaks

Of course, who could forget the slew of Japanese animated (animé had yet to make it to everyone's cultural lexicon back then) shows that ran from Monday to Friday evenings? During their height, they were simply part of every man-child's whimsy.

I remember Wednesdays and Fradays to be particularly hectic days in our young lives since my friends and 1 had to race down the sprawling UST campus as soon as the final afternoon bell rang at exactly 5:15 p.m. Why? Because we barely had 45 minutes to catch Mazinger Z and Voltes V. The Bozanians are coming! To the nearest jeepney stop, quickl

Despite the introduction of huge and expensive first-generation video cassette recorders called Betamax, there was (and is) no substitute to the giant silver screen.

We excitedly queued up outside cinema houses on Recro and in Cubao (no multiplexes back then) to watch

THE AUTHOR, in a black tust by Josy Samson, with former UST schoolmates and [3] Munroe- and Kelly Garett-wannabes during their 25th alumni homecoming such popeorn flicks as "Ice Casties," "Star Wars," "Saturday Night Fever," "Superman," "Grease," and "Blue Lagoon," to name a few. Those who loved Tagalog fare lapped up and parroted sound bites from such local potboilers as "Stepsisters," "Bedspacers," "Temptation Island," and "Underage." The definitive teen flick of the 1980s, "Bagets," was yet to be shown, but we in 1981 had long been basking in bagets teendom even before the movie opened in 1984.

Since our generation was privileged enough to live through part of the second "Golden Age of Philippine Cinema," we were also exposed to quite a number of memorable Filipino films. "Aguila," "Burlesk Queen," "Ina Ka ng Anak Mo," and the irreverent classic "Kakaba-kaba Ka ba?" come to mind.

Next to the jeepney, our favorite mode of transportation to get to our "happenings" [this was before "gimmick" gained its current meaning of wild recreation) was the ubsquitous "Love Bus." For a measly P1.50, we traveled in air-conditioned comfort to either Cubao or Makati from Escolta, and vice versa. It was certainly a much ? better deal compared to riding taxis sans "air con" as we headed for the hortest afternoon discos at Where Else?, Lost Horizon and Altirude 49

Indeed, writing an entire book filled with reminiscences won't be enough. I can go on and on, but I'll be revealing to the rest of the world how old hat and, yes, dated my former schoolmates and I have become.

Well, I don't know about them, but if being dated comes with being wiser and surer about one's self, then I certainly don't mind being old. And if getting old means trading one's youthful looks with the pleasure of finally feeling comfortable in one's skin, then bring on the years)

Being called a wise "thunder bird" ("tanda," to the uninitiated) is certainly much better than being lumped together with what kids today derisively call "jologs" and "pasaway." Such thought consoles when I look back on those days of Indian summer.

Running for fashion and philanthropy

N PRIVATE BANKING, ONE philosophy works best: Assume nothing. That's a great line to remember when confronted with the HSBC Charity Challenge, a whole-day, entertainment extravaganza with a triathlon, a bazaar fair and a charity jam.

After more than two years away from the triathlon circuit, I can once again call myself a triathlete thanks to Warner Manning On his fourth annual fundraising event for the education of children in appoverished schools and communities, HSBC's CEO invited a team of sports enthus asts, including out-of-shape, httle-ol' me, to complete the HSBC Charity Challenge for Children's Hour.

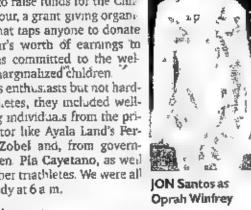

The first big challenge of the event, of course, was waking up at 5 a.m. when I had just gone to bed at 3 a.m. My last minute, rigorous training was only secondary to figuring out the most attractive outfits to wear that day.

The whole exercise was exhausting but invigorating, knowing that the race was not a compension but an activity for the benefit of six different charities involved in the education and development of disadvantaged children like Stepping Stone Learning Center for Special Children and Gawad Eskwela

What made this triathlon amque was the presence of personalities who are as committed as Warner to raise funds for the Chi. dren's Hour, a grant giving organization that taps anyone to donate one hour's worth of earnings to programs committed to the welfare of marginalized children.

Sports enthusiasts but not hardcore athletes, they included wellmeaning individuals from the private sector like Ayala Land's Fernando Zobel and, from government, Sen. Pia Cayetano, as weil as 30 other triathletes. We were all race ready at 6 a m.

Special event

A sprint triethlon starts with a 750m swim, followed by a 20-km bake and topped off with a 5 km run. Endurance, stamma and speed are essential ingredients to winning. Warner's triathion was a special one where the racers started in waves and cycling marshals attended to the safety of the triathietes.

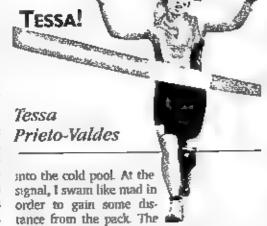

This was my type of celebrity challenge, with so many pampering perks. There were more volunteers than participants—it felt just like the ratio of staff to guests at luxury ho-swim is, after all, my favorite part of the race. Maintaining a steady pace, I am proud to say I was fourth out of the water with only super swimmer, Alaska's Fred Uytengsu (is it possible he has dolphin genes?), overtaking me from the last wave of swimmers.

Somehow, between the swim and the bike legs, my transition time took so long that I was the last participant to mount my bike Getting out of my swimwear to change into Outfit No. 2, spreading Lancôme sunscreen and applying Kerastase leave in hair conditioner were all so time-consuming.

About 20 minutes, to be exact. My transition area was completely furnished, including a hairbrush and mirror, to make sure ! was both race- and photo-ready.

Of the three disciplines, the bike portion is the best area to showcase top gear and colorful outfits. My coordinated bike shirt and helmet were both purchased at Power Bikes (rel. 8980377), owned by executive/biker Beaver Lopez. In fact, the bike was sent to his Rockwell shop just two days before the race for a "tune-up" with expert biker Boyet Camba. Biking with excess fat packed in one's rear does not really help. I had a notion that the bigger the burn, the more comfortable the ride would be. But in reality, the heavier the biker, the more strenuous the biking is.

Together with action couple Ernie and Jeena Lopez, my husband Dennis and I were on Burnham Park-speed as we completed six loops of the Fort. Other participants like the Polo tri-team passed our group twice as we leisurely pedaled along.

INOUIRER circulation department guy and Iron Man finisher Roy Adeva was my personal bike-guard. He made sure I was safe from the Fort traffic, which kept getting busier as every round got later in the morning. The loop route, passing through Market! Market!, the EuroStar Carmval and JuanMi's Grill, had mild to middle-difficulty stopes.

After the first round, Roy noticed I was not changing gears, so there and then he gave me lessons on how to shift my bike's gears. Talk about very special attention! For the rest of the bike leg, I would await for his signal to change gears. With two-thirds of the race completed, we cycled back to Polo to do the run leg. I quickly changed to Outfit No. 3 to march my running shoes and clown cap. Now clearly struggling at the rear of the pack, my only goal was to ALLROOM-DANCING QUEEN BECKY Garcia, head of Dance Sports Council of the Philippines, married recently snave Greek dentist-businessman Georg Sarakinis at the Makati Shangri-La Hotel's third floor garden.

Makari City Mayor Jejomar Binay officiated at the avil rites.

For the ceremony, the venue was transformed into a Grecian setting with columns adorned with roses. A red carpet was strewn with petals. Garcia's wedding gown was designed by international Filipino designer Monique Umillier while the groom had a German-tailored tailcoat. Garria's California-based sister, [rene McGhee, and Sarakısus' parents, Dr. Anastacios and Urania Sarakinis, with uncle Dr. Gerasimus Sarakinis, flew in days before the wedding. Uncle Gerasunus was a principal sponsor along with jet-setter Minda Feliciano Lonsdale and former First Lady Imelda Romualdez-Marcos.

Other sponsors were BMW country manager Jeorg Breuer, Bocos Sur Gow, Chavit Singson, Nedy Tantoco, Ambassador Joey Antonio, Marvie Contangeo-Yulo, lawyer Noel Laman, Johnny Litton, Cebu's top socialise Amparito Lhoillier and Nint Ramos-Licaros.

Two sponsors, Tonet Lagdameo and Makati First Lady Elemita Binay, were represented by son Cary Lagdameo and daughter Nancy Binay-Angeles, respectively.

The black-tie reception was held at the Quezon Ballroom of the Shangr-La. Saxophonist Vince Laborra performed during cocktails while the finest wines from Tita Trillo's Titama Wine Ceilar flowed.

Heny Sison's multitiered foodant cake was surrounded with red roses. Cory Quirino and Donnie Ramarez, one of the groomsmen, emceed the program.

The dance floor at the center of the reception hall was lit from below, to everyone's delight. It set up the mood for performances of winning numbers by members of the Dance Sports Council of the Philippines who bagged two gold medals in the recent South East Asian Games.

The party was capped by bailroom dancing to the music of Onda Latina.

Sarakinis met Garcia during a business trip to Manila in 2004. The groom said it was love at first sight for him and Garcia found him irresistible. He invited her to Frankfurt, where he was based, to meet his family.

An engagement party was held at Le Souffle m Rockwell, Makati City, in February 2005.

The newlyweds honeymooned in Frankfurt. A Greek wedding is scheduled in Athens middle of this year

The groom hinted that they might make Manila their home base.

73rd anniversary of Virgin's apparition marked

N HER LAST APPARI- message effectively. tion to young Mariette Beco in Banneux, Beigium, on March 2, 1933, the Virgin of the Poor said, "I am the mother of the Savior, mother of God."

Our Lady appeared to Mariette eight times from January that year, telling the young girl we should take care of the sick, be 10ya, to her and her Son, and consider prayer and poverty as the basic attitudes of our life

On Jan. 19, 1933, she identified herself as "Virgin of the Poor," affirming her virginity and attachment to the poor.

The devotion to the Virgin of the Poor reached the Phi ippines and 120 statues of her are found in churches and schools all over the country

In the '60s, German missionaries of the Society of the Divine Word (SVD) and the Missionary Benedictine Sisters of Tuzting (OSB) actively propagated devotion to the V.rgin, Banneux being near the border of Germany and Beigium.

Thus, it is fitting that the St. Scholastica's Archives Museum will have a statue of the Virgin of the Poor during the priory's celebration of its 100th year in the Phylippines this year. It is strongly recommended that images of Our Lady of Banneux have some identification to promote her

The first statue in the Philippines was received by Fr. Joseph Heuwagen, SVD, after a home leave in Germany. He blessed it at Sr. Joseph Parish in Claveria, Cagayan, on March 2, 1958.

The message of Our Lady in Banneux and more than 120 statues in the country are featured in the book "The Virgin of the Poor A Tribute from Her Filipino Children" by Milagros I. Dolores The book is available in leading bookstores including Catholic Book Center in Arzobispado, intramuros.

The Sisters of Mary who run Boystown and Girlstown in S.lang, Cavite, propagate the devotion. Their founder, Msgr. Aloysious Schwartz, was a devotee of the Virgin. The cause for the beaufication of Schwartz was launched in 2003. His remains are buried in the chapel in Girlstown. A memorabilia exhibit will open March 18.

HILDREN MAY BE THE toughest rival of the Boracay scenery in photographs, but they don't really have to compete, as we've found out in the many, many entries we have received where lensmen focused on kids vacationing in the island paradise.

Qyam Mychaels' photo of a boy engrossed in sand play against a backdrop of blue skies and threatening waves is among this week's winners, along with Michael Dy's floating buko vendor Dennis S. Sibal's wakeboarder and Rochene Bunag's shapely yogu

'So dazzling and diverse'

By Amadis Ma. Guerrero Contributor

THE SPANISH CONQUISTADORES named the big island of Mindoro "Mina de Oro" because gold was abundant in the region. The galleon ships-heavy with merchandise like spices, silk, gold, bee's wax, silver, farm products, manufactured goods from China-passed through here on the way to or coming from Acapulco, Mexico.

There was a lush mountain, Haicon, ancestral home of the 10 tribes of Mangyans, where the tamaraw roamed, a lovely lake at Naujan, and on the west coast, the superb Apo Reef and Pandan Island, with its jungle ambience.

The Spaniards must have been enchanted with the area, as would be the Americans 300 years later

Referring to the country in general, American author Stanley Karnow in his Pulitzer Prize-winning book, "In Our Image," wrote-

"Subsequent Spanish settlers, and the Americans who came centuries later, were awed by the beauty of the Philippines. Their wonderment was not misplaced. The archipelago, one of nature's glories, is indeed a brilliant tapestry of land, sea and sky, fields, forests, mountains, wildlife and peoples-all so dazzling and diverse as to seem unreal."

Natural beauty

Then and now, Oriental Mindoro's center of natural beauty was Puerto Galera, with its beaches, coves, superb natural harbor where the Spanish ships took refuge during storms, marine life, corals, dive sues, falls and bay (recently adjudged one of the 10 best in the

By the mid-1930s, Puerto Galera had become a manne reserve of the University of the Philippines Zoological Undersea Garden and Marine Biology Laboratory.

Tourism as we know it began in 1979 with the modest Montiel's Nipa Hut, which flourshed and soon gave way to other ims and resorts. These grew in number as Puerto Galera's reputation spread, and the coastal town began to attract adventure tourists, divers, foreign backpackers and all sorts of characters.

With substance abuse, sex and pedophilia, Puerto Galera acquired an imsavory image. But that was years ago, and things have improved since then.

Strategic location

A good introduction to Puerto Galera would be the lush, tropical Coco Beach Island Resort (Manila office, tel. 5230319) which recently celebrated its 19th anniversary. There are resort vans which every morning pick up guests at the Manula Hotel and the Manula Di amond Hotel for the two-hour ride to Tabangan Pier, just outside Batangas City proper. There follows a 90-minute outrigger boat ride to the resort, which is strategically located near Puerto Galera Bay and the main port of

The 10-ha Goco Beach Island Resort has, among other features, a revolving restaurant, seepney-cable car, coco-soap factory, hanging bridge and hilltop native cottages anud a forest setting, hemmed in by plants, flowers and trees. The scene approximates what Joseph Conrad called the monumental amphithe-

The ambience is proudly native. The rooms are made of bamboo, bamboo slats, wood, local tangile, nipa, sawali and bahastrades of corals. The lampshades made of native fans have a cascade of copix shells and complement the buntal hats. The bathrooms have a mosaic of corals, while the shower curtains showcase underwater and forest scenes capped by a rambow.

The open windows let in the breeze. There are electric fans and mosquito nets, but (except in the new Conference-Heritage House) no air-conditioning.

Oriental Mindoro's center of natural beauty offers beaches, coves, a superb natural harbor, marine life, corals, dive sites, falls and bay

"We are not trying to be a luxurious resort," explains general manager Connie Garcia Pausanos. "We prefer to run it like a small family place offering simple service, natural beauty and Filipino hospitality."

Within hailing distance of your cottage (just pull the cord outside the door) is the house of the service family assigned to you (in our case headed by Eugene).

They maintain the rooms and render any service you may need. At night one family member lowers the mosquito net hanging under the ceding, arranges your bed and blanket into a neat pattern, and places fresh flowers on your pillow.

Among its activities, the resort has a daily morning boat trip to another beach (free) and a separate ride for island-hopping (not free).

From Coco Beach, those who would like to further explore Puerto Galera can take a pumphoat ride (P180) to the nearby Puerto Galera Bay (also known as Muelle Bay) and the main port of the town, with its old Spanish cannon and marble cross

The landmark is in memory of Spanish navymen who perished when their warship Canonera sank here on Nov. 18, 1879, during a storm, while on patrol. The pier is the last piece of land ("ultima tierra que pisaron los tripulantes...") the crewmen stepped on before meeting their fate. The cross was placed there by their comrades.

Night life

During weekends and peak months, White Beach, with its resto-bars, resorts and hotels, has a throbbing night life. There is the chance of at-risk behavior, as the researchers would put it. Waiter-by-day Juancho (not his real name) blooms at night to become Juanita, and returns to his lodgings at the crack of Aninuan Beach is queter, and by day only the lapping of the waves and the delighted screams of passengers on speeding banana boars break the silence.

Sabang is another interesting place. It has no beach to speak of as the harbor is deep, so there are always boats and yachts at anchor. Three are many resto-bars, eater ies and inns where domestic and foreign tourists, including families, can be seen dining or drinking.

Sahang is also another point of departure (out of several) for Manila via Batangas. And so we bid goodbye to Puerto Galera and hope to return in the future, as we continue our exploration of this archipelago which is "all so dazzling and diverse as to seem unreal."

'Are there new job-hunting strategies that work?'

By Ernle O. Cecilia, FPM

I GRADUATED FROM REPUtable school almost two years ago, hoping that the name of the school would be my passport to a great career. I sent my resumé to every conceivable large multinational company and had my resumé on the online database, but I am still jobless today.

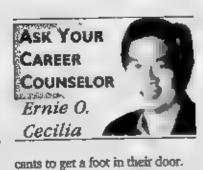

Are there proven ways to get an edge over other job applicanta? What are the human resource people really looking for when they are screening job applicants? I will appreciate it if you can give it to me straight, so that I can adjust my job-hunting strategies and finally land a job. Desperate Job Hunter

Thank you for giving me the license to "give it to you straight." On some occasions, I had sounded like Simon Cowell (the British Judge in American Idol) to many jobseekers. I recall having disappointed an ambitious person who has nothing but sheer ambition---no skills, no EQ, no savvy, and has not exerted any effort to develop job hunting skills. I simply said, "I don't mean to be rude, but how can you expect so many returns without ever making an investment in yourself?"

If you think that's appalling, try listening to Simon shock American Idol wannabes by telling them, "God, that's ugly!" or "That's the most disgusting performance I've ever seen!" or "You have absolutely no talent at all!"

Harsh realities

Getting a job in a multinational company is never an easy task. Believe me for I spent 25 years of my HR career in three of the top multinationals in the industry and I know how hard it is for job appli-

In the first place, there aren't too many vacant positions in multinationals. In fact, they often downsize their organizations; they lay off people and outsource certain functions. Since multinationals are good payers, few employees leave before retirement age. You are perhaps one among the jobless millions seeking to fill up a handful of vacancies in multinationals today. The 1.1 million new jobs created last year (per DOLE report) certainly did not occur in these multinationals, but in agriculture, fisheries and perhaps, service industries.

Compete for few jobs

People think that you have to be the very best to compete with so many for the few job openings in multinationals. In my experience, I have realized that the person who usually gets hired for the job is not necessarily the one who knows best how to do the job, but someone who knows best how to get hired.

At best, schools teach you how to do a job, not how to get a job. They don't teach you where to get the job they prepare you for, what to do with your first paycheck, how to avoid gerting stuck in the rat race, how to extricate yourself from the quagmire of the credit card, and other things that employees wish they knew before they step into their

Many years ago, we had a research about difficulties experienced by compames in filling up entry level positions. The study showed that many good accountants and engineers never get hired because they do not know how to communicate and create an impact during the hiring process. Many job apple they never get to the point where they can do the job, because they never make it to the short list. The job interview is usually a difficult stage, especially if you don't care about your appearance and can't express yourself well. I don't suggest that you overdress or have a Bostonian accent. Just wear neat, appropriate business attire and talk straight English-it's still the language of business.

HR's job

I wish to correct wrong impressions about HR departments. The job of HR is not to give Jobs to jobseekers. The only time that you can get the HR person's attention is if he thinks that you match the job. His job is to fill up a vacancynot to give you a job. To get his attention, write a resumé that helps him match you with the

Whenever I review a resumé, I look for the competencies possessed by the job applicant. When a resumé seems like a jigsaw puzzle to me, I simply throw it away. Guess what most resumés highlight-color of the eyes, color of the hair, height, and other irrelevant personal information that say nothing about the applicant's ability to

cants know how to do the job, but do the job. (Never send a biodata that can be bought from the bookstore.)

> Most resumés highlight work experiences-what one has done, rather than what he can do. This explains why many people get stuck in the careers they hate.

Get an edge

Multinationals continually get a deluge of job applications, either online, by mail or from walk ins. If you want to have an edge over other job applicants, follow the tips which appear in my books at popular bookstores, "How to Get a Job" and "How to Keep Your Job."

(Public service announcement: There will be a grand reunion of all alumns of the University of Nueva Caceres, Naga City in September this year Alumui in Metro Manila can email me their contact details so that the Organizing Committee can contact them.)

Cruise ship waiter sails through life's challenges

By Ruth M. Floresca Contributor

FOR THE PAST EIGHT YEARS, Angel O. del Rosario Jr. has been visiting various countries all over the world on board a luxury liner. From the sultry islands of the Caribbean to exotic Mediterranean territories and the Alaskan coasts among many others, he has seen amazing sights and been to fantastic places that most of us could only hope to see all in a

Here, Del Rosario shares the delights and desolation File pino overseas workers experience while working on B cruise ship

Promising beginning

Del Rosario initially worked as a fine dining waiter in a restaurant in one of Manila's prominent hotels for one year and gained a lot of experience in dealing with affluent clients in the process. He then transferred to a bar at another horel where he stayed for another three years.

In 1997, two years after getting married and with au infant to plan a brighter future for, Del Rosario decided to try his luck and applied as waiter onboard a cruise ship After three interviews and several months' waiting, he was called to fly to Italy and meet his ship in September

"It was an exciting though sad time for me," he recalls "Leaving my wife and barely a half-year-old son is heart breaking but I had to pursue better opportunities for all our sakes." Together with several other Filipinos, Del Potentio embarked on a Wonderful journey that brought him to exciting lands and enabled him to meet numerous people along the way

In the ship, food is never a problem, "We can eat as much as we want to although there are times I feel like foregoing steak for long time," says Del Rosario humorously He recounts meeting a wealthy Filipino family once who, after several days of rich food and wine, were asking for plain sardines towards the end of the journey. "Different cutsines are exciting for the first several months but we do end up longing for Filipino food." Since the ship's crew is comprised of 60 to 70 percent Pinoy stuff anytime," he grins. Waiters are given different uniforms appropriate to the meals they serve. They even have one formal suit each. He shares, "One other good thing in the ship is, we don't have to wash our clothes and do the bothersome task of pressing them. We just label them, put them in bags and send them to the laundry room where crew assigned for those chores send them back clean and pressed."

Del Rosario also appreciates the fair treatment that the management metes out on everyone. "Whether you're a Portuguese, Filipino, Italian or British, when you commit an offense, you are sent home or given disciplinary action," he explains. "We can freely air out our complaints, requests and work-related problems to our supervisors, the for only eight months out of a purser or even up to the capyear if they want to. During their off-hours, members of the crew can avail of some activities that the guests also enjoy. "We can go scuba-diving or sight-seeing inland when we have free time," Del Rosario shares. The management also allows the crew to hold themed fun activities on board such as pajama parties, karaoke nights and other similar activities, aside from the usual Christmas get-togethers

Downside

On his very first trip, Del Rosario already experienced seasickness due to a fierce storm. Waves eight stories high buffeted the ship and tossed everything about, shattering a lot of breakables and wreaking havoc on everyone's stomachs. Now, he's already used to bad weather and knows enough to stay in his room to ride out the nausea and headaches by taking tabiets given at the pharmacy "When there's a storm, everybody is advised to stay in their rooms for safety reasons so there are no guests to serve in the dining room anyway."

He recalls, "The first time I got a glimpse of the harbor view from a hotel window in Naples, Italy and marveled at the profusion of beautiful flowers and majestic houses built on sides of the hills, how I wished I had my wife beside me." He felt the same way on other numerous occasions The homesickness he says will always be there but he compensaces by buying prepaid cards and utilizing the satellite phone provided on board the ship to call home often

On doing one's job well

Del Rosario has been assigned to different ships, owned by the mother company, with various route destinations worldwide over a period of eight years. "I have served passengers of different nationalities and have even made friends with some of them," he reveals. He admits to paying special attention to the elderly guests who appreciate being talked to often such that there are those who still keep in contact through letters even when Del Rosario is home in Philippines

There was also someone who sent me Reggie Miller souvenirs once he got home to Atlanta when he found out I was also a big fan," he imparts. His wife Juliet happily discloses that one passenger thoughtfully sent shirt pins shaped like angels to the whole family. An American couple who thoroughly enjoyed their stay promised Del Rosario to come back for another cruise package after five months and they did!

Aside from the basic pay he receives. Del Rosario often gets generous tips and gifts from pleased passengers after the end of every trip. Indeed, the way his clients show their appreciation to this friendly waiter who performs his duties to the satisfaction of those serves is affirmation enough that he is doing the

Getting focused

By Bishop Precioso D. Cantillas, SDB, DD

GETTING FOCUSED IS ONE IMPORTANTAND NECESSARY PERsonal trait to be efficient and effective in one's profession or business. One needs to barness all his knowledge and skills in the performance of his job or business. Success in one's work or enterprise largely depends on how much priority and centeredness one applies to it. However, it can also happen that those who concentrate all their energies at their work could become narrow-minded, indifferent to others and to the world outside or perhaps even become resistant to any change in work or methods of working. Such kind of focusing would seem to ruin in the long run the worker, his profession or even the business he is in. Soon enough, it will make the worker out of step with his work and his environment

To stay on track in this fast-changing world of today, the worker, or anyone for that matter, needs to have a better way of focusing which looks at not only on the things at hand or actions being taken but also and more especially at the deeper meaning of things and the higher motivations of the actions to be taken. He needs to adopt a new perspective—renewed "eyes"—in order to see new avenues in the workplace

This new way of perceiving and understanding is like the "new wine" Jesus mentions in today's Gospel-an understanding based on faith in His teachings. But this "new wine" as He said, needs also "fresh wineskins"—a renewal in the worker's mind and heart, which will make him savor his work as a more meaningful and satisfying experience than the boring and monotonous load it used to be. (Email the author at mfvg@skyinet.net)

Gospel: Mark 2: 18-22

"Likewise, no one pours new wine into old wineskins. Otherwise, the wine will burst the skins, and both the wine and the skins are ruined. Rather, new wine is poured into fresh wineskins."

Flexibility

By Teresa R. Tunay, OCDS

WINESKINS CAN BE SEEN NOT JUST AROUND VINEYARDS OR IN places where there is wine. They can be right in your place of work. Because for me, the wineskins in today's Gospel could also refer to people-and the "old" and the "new" have nothing to do with age. Rather, the word "wineskins" evokes an image of flexibility or lack of it. And what they're supposed to contain - wine - may be likened to ideas that are poured into people's mands. There are people advanced in age but who still remain open to new ideas, while there are those who may be under 30 but are already ngid in their thinking. Thus, one's flexibility or inflexibility is not determined by chronological age, instead, it's the attitude that tells whether a person is an old or a new

One venue to test this theory is the skills upgrading seminars conducted by many companies nowadays. Pay attention to people participating in the open forum—their questions and arguments. You'll see gray-haired people easily grasping new ideas introduced by speakers; on the other hand you'll also find people barely out of college who are so unyielding they reject anything clashing with their

At these work-related seminars, it is best to be a "new wineskin"flexible and accommodating of fresh concepts—in order to benefit much from the knowledge being offered. Being closed to new discoveries and learning makes you an "old wineskin," bursting or breaking from your inability to absorb innovative impressions. And you very well know, mental inflexibility could lead to a kind of mental atrophy, where the muscles of your mind, so to speak, shrink because they no longer throb with life-giving change. Let us start working to find solutions!

By Tita Datu Puangco

JAM A 25-YEAR-OLD CALL CENter agent for a global bank. The recent deaths at the anniversary of the "Wowowee" show at the Ultra Stadium was a wakeup call for me. I feel thankful I have work especially when I saw the scenes of poor people lining up for days for the opportunity to earn some money.

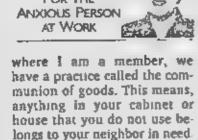

Let us stop blaming and start worlding to find solutions to our society's problems. Recently, I was listening to BBC journalists talk about 20,000 children in our prisons mixed with adults under despicable conditions. What is happening? My idealism is starting to erode. I love this country but I am just an ordinary citizen with ordinary means. It looks like our politicians and business leaders have become calloused to the pains of the masa. Please tell me what we can do for "anxious people out of work?"

Conscience-stricken Employee

Thank you for your letter, Indeed, we have to move from simply an outpouring of sympathy to begin to do something concrete. Often, we look for national solutions to our problems but we also know how bureaucracy can overwhelm and even suffocate initiatives. What I suggest is, let us look at what you and I can do at our level. You will be surprised at what is possible.

Communion of goods

In the Focolare Movement

What do you have in excess?

Clothes, shoes, appliances, books. Let us put them in communion at the service of our neighbor in need Do you have a poor relative who cannot afford to go to school? Why not see, together with your family or other relatives, how you can support the person through school? With each working person contributing an amount, the task becomes easier

A friend of mine sends to school all her belpers at home. Depending on their abilities, they either enroll for college or a vocational school. This means managing their schedules so that the housework gets done. With this method, she already has over a dozen graduates who are now successfully emplayed or self-employed.

Heiping where possible

Can you create an additional job at home or at work? Recently, a friend of mine, while going to mass, sat beside a young man who was silently sobbing. He recently was fired from his work as an office driver because a taxi bumped into an enterprise for the economy his car. In fact, he was been two weeks out of work and did not know where to get the next meal for his family. My friend gave him money to help his family. She also realrzed there was some risk in taking him in as a driver. Doing some reference checking, she gave him a chance. Now the driver is happily employed My friend is equally happy because the driver has proven to be dependable.

Do you have time to set up a soup kitchen to feed people for free even just for a day in a week? If you are a member of an organization, the Rotary Club perhaps or the Soroptimist Club, name it, organize and get it done

What I am suggesting is for us to work to improve the situation not of the nameless poor but of the poor who are in our families or neighborhood. These are situations within our influence and control

Then, there are those of us who have more. A friend of mine had land in the province. He realized that he can afford to spare a hectare and donate it to Gawad Kalinga. Meeting with his children, they agreed heartily to make the donation Soon 100 poor people will have their own concrete

Economy of sharing

For our business leaders, how about the challenge of a still another breakthrough concept of Chiara Lubich, the founder of the Pocolare Movement? It is of sharing, it is purposively setting up a business that will opgrate in the market economy, but the destination of profits is not the pockets of the owners. Profits go to the poor and to develop people with a new gospel mentality, believing in an economy of sharing rather than having. Over 800 companies of this type exist in the world today

Then for our church leaders, can we come up with an organized communion of goods, jobs and talents in every parish and diocese and truly become a Church with a preferential option for the poor? Can we build one heart and one mind towards the goal of truly helping our less fortunate brothers? For government, everything has been said and suggested by experts. We simply pray that politicians work out plans to truly help the poorest of the poor. Stay optimistic, when you start to help, joy will dwell and swell in your heart. Do not lose your youthful idealism. It is time to roll up our sleeves and do what we can. God bless!

Finally, congratulations to the Pocolare Movement that is celebrating its 40 years of service in the Philippines this Februaryi May God continue to grow and bless all your en-

'My assigned mentor refuses to see me!"

By Josie O. Santamaria

HOWEVER, NOT ALL FUNCTIONAL experts are fit to ment or The way you describe your potential mentor shows that he may be psychologically and spiritually unfit for a mentoring relaconship. To be fit as a mentor, an expert must also have the following important qualities:

· Willingness to give or to share their expense with a talented younger person in a noncompetitive way.

· Loyalty to the organization; this loyalty is expressed in their desire to contribute to the leadership pool to ensure organizational stability and continuity by developing talented young people and preparing them for SUCCESSION.

 Willingness to expose their protégée to new ideas, perspective and standards, and to the values and norms of the profession.

· Enjoyment and enthusiasm about their field such that they continue to update themselves in their

 Recognition of the potentials of younger talented persons and encouragement of the latter to excellent per-

 Emotional security i.e., they do not see their protégée's as competitors; are not threatened when their protégées are showing progress and well on the mad to excellence, accepting the possibility that the protégées might even become better than their mentors.

Self-assessment

However, let me also call your attention to the possibility that your potential mentor may have negative perceptions of you based on your behavior from your past interactions with him or hearsay from others. This may explain his seeming hostility to-move up, so they behave in ways that "rub some people the wrong way." An HPP may rush people, have an air of superiority, and have a competitive spirit. Potential memors may also think that their protegées will end up not acknowledging or recognizing their mentors' role in their career success. This can discourage some potential mentors who do not see mentoring as a mission or a calling from God.

Sometimes, HPPs are impatient to

There is also the perception that HPPs want to be always on the receiving end of the line, i.e., they "pick on the brain" of the mentor and do not take the insuative to find out what they can also do for their mentors and how they can be of service to them.

Please reflect on your behaviors in past unteractions with him and idenufy the need for possible change on your part.

You can certainly learn the competencies you need for your overall development through your own efforts. such as those you have cited in your e-mail. However, the benefits of having a mentor from the organization is that the latter does not only import knowledge and skills but also the systems and processes, standards and norms unique to the organization and its business: and share the values unique to the organization's culture and to the profession.

So for the time being, it is a good idea to bide your time and allow the HR director to smoothen the path towards your meeting with your potential mentor. She could get feedback from the finance director about how he perceives you, paving the way towards your increased self-awareness and the resulting behavioral changes that you may want to undertake. Meanwhile, be cordial and respectful to the finance director and do not talk against his back even if you are merely describing his actual behaviors. God bless you!

"Everybody in the Company continues to be proud to work at Johnson & Johnson* primarily because of the culture of the Company. It is very caring, very nurturing - it demands of you, but it also truly takes care of you."

many Filipinos are not aware of the breadth of the business of Johnson & Johnson®, "Most people just think baby powder when they think of Johnson & Johnson"," acknowledges Grace del Rosario-Castaño, President and Managing Director of the Johnson & Johnson* Philippine affiliate. Johnson's Baby Powder is, after all, probably the most enduring, most widely used and best-loved baby product in the world. "But did you know that we have Janssen, we have Medical? What I think people do not see is that we have anchored our very core on health care."

Three companies, in fact, make up Johnson & Johnson® (Philippines), Inc. and share in the spacious, gleaming complex where once were fields of cogon grass as far as the eye could see: Johnson & Johnson® Consumer, well-known for Johnson's Baby products and other leading products in women's health, children and adult skin and heir care, and oral and wound care markets, Johnson & Johnson® Medical Philippines, which markets medical products, devices, instruments and compment in specialty areas such as wound closure, endosurgery, interventional cardiology, infection prevention, orthopedics, and self-monitoring devices; and t is quite likely that Janssen Pharmaceutical, a member of the Johnson & Johnson^e Worldwide Family of Companies specializing in the fields of psychiatry, anaesthesia and analgesia, gastroenterology, parasitology, allergology, and cardiovascular research. It is, as Lawrence G Foster puts it in A Company That Cares, a "double life" that Johnson & Johnson⁶ has been living for most of its years as a producer of pharmaceutical and professional products, as well as consumer products that are health related.

Johnson & Johnson Philippines is heir to this rich heritage and has established a formidable presence in the world of health care. They may compete in the consumer personal products category, but because their foundation is health care, they aspire not merely to sell superior quality products but to enrich lives.

A significant, and unique, aspect of that heritage - and one that the Philippine company lives with deep pride is the Credo. A one-page declaration of the Company's philosophy articulates its responsibilities to its customers, employees, the community, and its stockholders - in that order. The spirit of this document governs every aspect of the way they do business across Johnson & Johnson affiliales around the world. And the prosperity of the Johnson & Johnson® Family of Companies over more than a century is testument to the belief that in abiding by these principles, it would profit the business as well

"You can be highly ethical and profitable, too it doesn't have to be one or the other," imparted Castaño. "Johnson & Johnson^a is a good example, where it is truly well-grounded in terms of ethics and that is the reason why it is delivering good business results."

Numerous surveys and studies bear this out. An opinion poll conducted by public relations firm GolinHarris shows that if consumers believe that a company's ethics and social responsibility are authentic and essential to what it stands for, they will champion the brand use its products and services, recommend it to others, welcome the company into their community, and have trust for the company and its people

"It is how we do business. The customer comes first," said Castaño, "Everyone caters to the consumer, but Johnson & Johnson® puts the consumer first." She cites the Tylenot recall in the 1980s after the infamous tampering incidents in the United States as an example. "Our paramount concern is always the consumer"

This kind of character, fortified by the Credo, is something that inspires high regard from its employees as well "You have that pride," expressed one marketing manager, "that when you say Johnson & Johnson*, it's not just about business, really it is about relationships, it is about pride in your products, about working with good people. You live. understand, and really take in the Credo. Here, there is such a thing as integrity, as fairness." With the Credo as their constitution, 50 to speak, the Company nurtures an environment that is caring of its employees. We are responsible to our employees, the men and women who work with us throughout the world "Everybody in the Company continues to be proud to work at Johnson & Johnson*, primarily because of the culture of the Company It is very caring, very nurturing - it demands of you, but it also truly takes care of you," continued the manager

Johnson & Johnson* Philippines is proud of, too "that our employees are proud to be part of the Company," said Castaño

Half-a-century's history behind it yet it is dynamic and evolving. "We have our business plans, our growth targets," said Castaño. "But, ultimately, these are not really the point. We are setting our own challenges." "Sometimes, I must admit, there are days that I wake up and say, 'Why are we'making it difficult for ourselves?" It isn't really necessary. But this is something that we are proud of: we are setting our own goals I am proud of the fact that everyone in this Company is trying to stretch themselves, despite the fact that it may not be necessary, or expected of us."

It is this kind of commitment, Castaño feels, that probably will set Johnson & Johnson* Philippines apart from the others, who are satisfied to deliver what is expected of them. "In our case, that is not good enough. We have to outperform ourselves, and not just the competition." Why? "Because, .we want to be better not only a better company, but better people. That is Johnson & Johnson *

The Johnson & Johnson's Credo: A Way Of Life

The evidence on this point is clear. Institutions, both public and private, exist because the people believe in them, or at least willing to tolerate them. The day has passed when business was a private matter—if it ever really was. In a business society, every act of business has social consequence and may arouse public interest. Every time business hires, builds, sells or buys, it is acting for the... people as well as for itself, and it must be prepared to accept full responsibility for its acts...

From "Or Forfeit Freedom" by General Robert Wood Johnson, 1947

it is no wonder why General Johnson took it upon himself to write a simple one-page manifesto that defines, to put it simply, what Johnson & Johnson stands for. "We believe," it begins. Known as the Credo, it goes on to describe the Company's principle of valuing customers, employees, the community, and

"We are not in business to make profits," stated Johnson & Johnson scion and legendary chairman General Robert Wood Johnson II, who authored the Credo, "we are in business to earn them by serving our customers." He believed that by putting the customer first, the business would be well served.

stockholders - in that order

Written in 1943, the Credo represented what Johnson called "a new industrial philosophy" that was far ahead of its time in contending that corporations have responsibilities beyond the manufacturing and marketing of products. This belief was put to the acid test when, in the autumn of 1982, it became homifyingly clear that the deaths of seven people in the United States had been caused by cyanide-laced capsules of Tylenol*. Johnson & Johnson* acted swiftly: it alerted the public through the media, stopped production and pulled advertising of Tylenol*, and recalled and destroyed thirty-one million capsules at a cost of $100 million. Within months, the Company introduced triple-safety-sealed, tamper-resistant packaging.

The Credo is a compass that has guided the Company successfully through crisis. Beyond mere words framed on the wall, the Credo represents a set of values that the Johnson & Johnson community shares and fives by

"Once you are a Johnson & Johnson* employee, you are expected to take the Credo to heart because the expectation is that you have to find congruence between the Credo and your personal values," explains Owi Salazar, Director for Human Resources of Johnson & Johnson* Philippines. "If there is no consistency between the two, you will find no satisfaction and fulfillment in what you are doing."

Contributing to the Credo's strength, longevity and success as the moral compass of the Company is the fact that the document has been able to adapt with the times. To ensure its relevance, the Credo has been revised several times through the years. Updates have included provisions recognizing the changing role of fathers in the family, the importance of the environment, and the balance between work and family

Another key to the success of the Credo is its universality. Translated into thirty-six-languages, it is the thread that binds the Pamily of Companies that spans across Africa, Asia Pacific, Eastern Europe, Europe, Latin America, the Middle East and North America.

In the Philippines, the Credo has found its context in the Philippine culture. Salazar says, "The Credo doesn't dictate any boundaries in terms of application. As we are a developing country, there is a lot of emphasis on our role in nation building. We make it a part of our role to be active in our community through social investing, philanthropic activities, and in doing our share in uplifting the quality of life of nearby communities."

An example of the commitment of Johnson & Johnson Philippines to the community is the Employee Volunteerism under the wing of the Company's "Credo-Based Corporate Social Responsibility" program. Unlike previous years when philanthropic work was largely a management of the Company. In line with this, Johnson & Johnson Philippines renewed its partnership with World Vision, a sponsorship program for school children. Today, sixty employees have "adopted" one hundred-sixty children through the World Vision campaign.

A beacon through crisis; a guide for the globe; the Johnson & Johnson® Credo continues to chart the course of the Company more profoundly than any strategic business document could because of its unique ability to affect every member of the Johnson & Johnson® family on a personal level

TAMES AND THE TAMES

come from a big family I am the eldest among ten children. I really wanted to think of a way to help my parents right away. It was my father's dream that I become a midwife. It was actually his dream for his youngest sister but it wasn't realized because of financial problems. My father really strived so that I could study to become a midwife," recounts Carolina Millan, a recipient of the Johnson & Johnson Outstanding Midwives Awards of the Philippines (JOMAP).

Today, Carolina is living this dream. A graduate from the Marian School fof Midwifery in 1974, Carolina is a fully certified midwife who today, runs her own Well-Pamily midwife clinic in Barangay Rizal, Makati.

Carolina's achievements in her field were first cited in Year 2000, when she was named one the 10 Most Outstanding Midwives of the country by JOMAP. Founded in 1994, the awards program is a joint annual project of the Integrated Midwives Association of the Philippines (IMAP), Inc and Johnson & Johnson affiliate companies, namely Johnson & Johnson® Philippines, Johnson & Johnson® Medical Philippines and Janssen

Pharmaceutical. The program aims to give due recognition to midwives for their noble efforts as front-liners in delivering healthcare service to low-income Filipion families. Midwives are responsible for majority of births in the country where up to 81% of deliveries occur outside the hospital. The Veword also aims to raise the standards of the midwifery profession while inspiring other -midwives around the country to follow the .gwardee's example.

"I nover thought that I would win this Taward. I was so excited because that was my first award. It was nice that I got it while I was still young and my children could see It so that they could follow this example. This award has been an inspiration for me," mys Carolina.

Carolina's award and present success is to product of a lifetime of hard work and perseverance. The establishment of her lyingin classe and private practice did not happen overnight. It all started with an idea that she got while working as a government audwife.

"h's been my life's dream to put up a lying-in climic. When I worked in the health center, I used to do home baths. There were times when they were happening all at the same time. In a day, there would be five deliveries outside. I couldn't figure out how to divide my time between five patients. And so I did a test. What I did was to bring them to my home and deliver the babies on the floor, this way I could attend to them all at the same time. That's how I got the sice for a lying-in clinic," recalls Carolina.

Carolina was determined to turn her idea into a reality. She worked overseas for five years in order to save up money for her dream community clinic. The time away from her loved ones proved to be difficult, but her selfsacrifice paid off. In 1991, Carolina was able to set up a 2-bedroom clinic just across from

In 1997, Carolina was tapped by IMAP to join a network called the Well-Parnily Midwife Clinic, Through the support and training of this network, Carolina was able to expand her clinic. Today, her Well-Family Clinic has grown into a 9-bedroom buthing center, offering a wide variety of services from newborn screening to ultra sound examinations. Carolina was also able to enhance her services with Johnson & Johnson®-supported programs such as Touch Therapy and baby care education. "Johnson & Johnson" has really helped me a lot. Mothers appreciate being laught how to take better care of their babies Through Touch Therapy training, they learn that every touch means something ... you can see that the baby really responds to the massage..., there's more bonding with the parents. Mothers also appreciate the Johnson's Baby Starter Kits and Modess Maternity kits they receive when they give birth... We also use the Johnson & Johnson educational materials in our Mathers' Classes, "explains Carolina.

Carolina is truly an example of a person living her dream and making a difference in the community. More than 6,000 babies have been delivered safety into world because of her, and her selflessness and commitment to her profession continues to be an inspiration to her fellow midwives.

Touch the Language of Love Johnsoni baby Touch

a mother has upon seeing her baby for the first time is to cradle her little one in her arms and gently touch her Through her touch, a mother expresses a love that she has felt growing inside her for nine months in a way words could pever convey

Touch is a language Johnson & Johnson® intimately understands. In 2005, Johnson's Baby celebrated the 10th anniversary of its Touch Therapy Program in the Philippines. This program has raised awareness of the many benefits of touch and infant massage among mothers and healthcare professionals. It is a key mitiative of the Johnson & Johnson® Touch Research Institute in the Philippines, which was founded in 1989 through a collaboration between Johnson & Johnson® Philippines and the Philippine General Hospital. Notably, this is one of only three such institutes in the world, the other two being in Miams and Paris respectively

"Johnson's Baby understands the universal desire of mothers to have happy, healthy babies. Coupled with the superior products that we provide, Johnson's Baby advocates the use of Touch as a tool in ne of the first instincts raising happy, healthy babies," explains Tina Sabarre, marketing manager of Johnson & Johnson Philippines

Research shows that both parents and babies benefit emotionally and physically from touch therapy and infant massage. Babies who are regularly massaged enjoy a better, stronger bond with their parents. Fathers, in the meantime, get a boost of self-esteem because of their deeper involvement in the care of their child.

The physical benefits of touch therapy are also substantial. Premature babies have been observed to increase their weight. by forty-seven percent after a ten-day program using touch therapy. Pre-term infants who were massaged regularly were who were not.

*Touch therapy has definite clinical benefits for children, especially pre-term infants. Infant massage has been found to strengthen the respiratory, gastrointestinal and central nervous systems of pre-terms aiding in their heightened growth and faster physical development. Thus, survival chances of high-risk pre-term babies are significantly mereased. Massage also relaxes the body and mind, helping babies sleep better, and encourages their overall physical development," expounds Dr. Ma. Louisa Unson-Peralta, M.D., Johnson & Johnson Philippines' "Face of Touch Ambassador".

Full-term babies and older children stand to benefit as well from touch therapy Touch helps babies to relax to ensure proper health and growth, while strengthening the immune system. A study conducted at the Touch Research Institute in Florida found that massage resulted in the significant increase in white blood cell count, critical in boosting the body's defense agamst disease.

Touch has social and cognitive development benefits as well. Infants who are massaged have been observed to be more responsive to their parents by exhibiting more eye contact as well as discharged five days earlier than infants more smiling, vocalizing, reaching and orienting responses.

A study among pre-school children, meanwhile, showed that the children's performance on design, animal pegs and maze tests were improved after they were given a fifteen-minute massage

The benefits of touch are numerous and significant. It is one of the simplest and best ways parents can give their baby a happy and healthy start in life. Johnson & Johnson recognizes this and through its Touch Therapy Program, the company hopes to educate and encourage more people to "speak" the first language a baby understands.

Sa bawat panahon, sa bawat benerasyon, babang may inang nagmamabal may Johnson's Baby.

She found love and the in the troubled farms of Negros

ACOLOG CITY—Whee Selko Ohaski Bedies first came to Regres in 1991, she saw from the plane the vast green fields of the island. "Why is there so much bunger in this wide green pasture?" she had wondered to berself.

The 45 year-old liarson officer of the Japan Committee for Negros Campaign (JCNC) has since revised her impression of the province. Although she saw firsthand the grinding poverty that had farm workers ending up as lifetime servants to landowners to pay off their debts, Seiko fell in love with the Island and its people.

In fact, she married a local farmer eight years her senior who has five children from a previous relationship, despite initial objections from her father. "I will live the rest of my life in Negros because the women, children and men in this island really make my life rich and valuable," she declares.

Bloody conflicts

Seiko had come to the Philippines as a representative of JCNC, which started out by giving rehef services to Negros evacuces who fled their homes in the face of Oplan Thunderbolt. The operation was part of the government's total war policy and was meant to crush the rebellion that resulted from agrarian conflict in the province. The crash of the sugar industry in the early 1980s led wealthy hacenderos or landlords to abandon their vast sugar lands, which the farmers eventually took over for their food crops. Bloody conflicts ensued between landowners and farmers, with the turf war spilling all over Ne-

The Japanese foundation now helps facilitate people-to-people trading between the farmers' cooperatives in Negros and consumer groups in Japan. This alternative trading scheme allows farmer producers to directly market their goods to consumers at better prices instead of passing through middlemen. Their producis-green bananas, muscovado sugar and organic vegetables—are also a break from refined sugar, a monocrop that has tied Negros to the whims of the international market.

The program has helped rehabilitate the socio-economic life of dislocated farm workers after the United States, one of the world's biggest buyers of sugar, drastically cut back its quota.

Despite their difficulties, the people welcomed her into their homes and generously shared what they had, recalls Seiko. "I spent several nights in the house Seiko Ohashi's father disowned her when she became an activist and married a Fifipino farmer from Negros. But she stayed to raise his five children, and to dedicate herself to improving the lives of the poor in her adopted home of a socada in La Castellana, which was about two hours from Bacolod City. I thought I knew enough about the Philippines and its people from my previous visits to other provinces, but this experience gave me a very different view," she adds. The people were good to her, sharing what little food they had and their most comfortable space for Seiko to sleep in Foreign visitor

"I mild them, 'Sorry to disturb you, but can I stay for some more days to learn about your life?' They said, 'Don't be sorry. We are very proud to have you in our house. We thought only hacenderos can have guests. We are happy that even if our house is small, we can also have a foreign visitor. We are no longer second class citizens."

Seiko's immersion in peasant life was a dramatic break from her past. "I come from a typical Japanese family where children were expected to become either doctors or lawyers, and the daughters got married-immediately," she says. Becoming an activist changed everything, however. It started when she became a student at a university in Hokkaido in 1975, the year Vietnam was liberated

"Some dormitory friends invited me to attend a youth solidarity conference in Thailand. I was very apolitical then, and it was not for anything that I said yes. I was just happy to go abroad. I did not really understand what they were talking about," she recalls.

She went with a group of students to a farming town outside Bangkok and talked with a farmer who had to stop working his land because it had been poisoned by wastes coming from a Mitsubishi plant.

I realized that Japan became rich because it was doing these things to other people, other countries," says Seiko. "I decided that I had to do something to make up for what my country was doing." She adds: "I did not want to go back, but my friends told me we had to do something to change our country. Without changing Japan, they said, we would not be able to change anything."

Selko did not go home to Hokkaido but stayed for several years in Tokyo, where she worked to support herself through university and got involved with human rights groups. "My father cut off my allowance because he thought I had joined the Red Army," she recounts, laughing.

In 1991, Seiko was assigned to the Philippines as JCNC's liaison officer. Her international solidarity work took a personal dimension when she met Fred Bodios, now 53, a farmer and fisherman, who himself was very much ່ຫvolved with the evacuees in Negros at that time Fred has several children by his first wife: Marygrace, now 27, Alfredo Jr., 25; Al, 23, Gretchen, 19, and Sisa, 18. Her husband is now barangay captain of Nayon village, Seiko dedares proudly.

"My father was shocked, Why get married at 40, and to a Filipino?' he asked."

Strained relationship

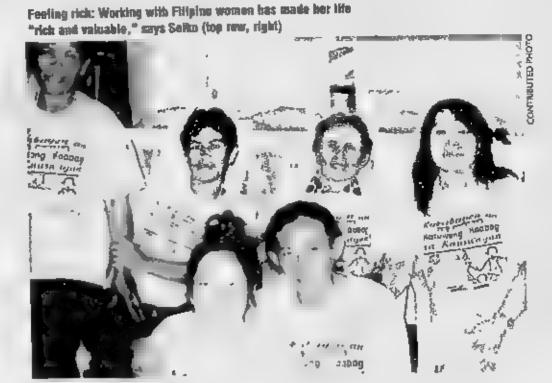

The marriage further strained their relationship, but when her father got sick of lung cancer, Seiko went home and stayed in Japan to take care of him. Those three months made up for the 30 years they spent apart after the old man disowned her. He died about three

"He told me it was good that I married a Pilipino because a Japanese husband would never 'loan' his wife to take care of her sick father," she says. "Besides, Fred charmed his way into the heart of my very conservative moth-

Fred's daughters also impressed Seiko. In Japan, she says, people would not bother to change their rounne to take care of a sick relative. "I remember the first time I got pregnant at 40 and had a miscarriage. I was so afraid, but my stepdaughters told me, Tita, you don't need too many nurses and doctors. We will take care of you,' I cried so hard. We do not have anything like that in Japan," she narrates.

Her personal relationship with Fred and her stepdaughters echo Japan-Philippine relations in a way, observes Serko. The Japanese donate money to help Negros farmers become independent. In return, the Japanese learn the value of human relationships from Filipinos. Japan has become so developed that people seem to have stopped thinking and caring," she notes.

Dear Joe,

I came across Oliver because of a text message mistakenly sent to me. The message was supposedly for my aunt, but he sent it to me. It was only after three days that Oliver informed me that he sent the message to the wrong person. But what I didn't understand was why he still wanted my landline after apologizing about the message. I gave it to him, and we began talking and texting each other regularly. Joe, it felt like I've known him for a long time. On Oct. 21, 2002, he asked me if I could be his girl I know it was a stupid idea to say yes since I didn't even know what he looked like But still, I followed what my heart was telling me, and so he became my boyfnend that day.

After two weeks, we decided to meet at a chapel. When I saw a guy walking inside the chapel, I immediately felt it was him Oliver, on the other hand, felt the same way, too. Soon enough, I found myself getting acquainted with his family. Oliver told me that his family liked me. That was the first time I did something crazy, Joe—that is, meeting up with a total stranger who is technically my boyfriend, and even going with him to his house. But Joe, I loved the feeling, and there were really no regrets.

Sadly, my family didn't approve of him, since he had not finished his studies yet. But that didn't stop me from loving him

Maybe my great love and faith in him inspired Oliver to continue his studies and straighten out his once chaotic life. His family was so glad, since they could see a great positive change in Oliver. We had an almost-perfect relationship, Joe. There were a lot of fights, but they didn't lessen our feelings and respect for each other instead, they made our love grow deep-

Sadly, one night, we had a fight, and I told him that I wanted to end our relationship. It seemed like he couldn't bear the pain of losing me, Joe. That fateful dawn of Sept. 16, 2004, Oliver committed suicide.

It's been more than a year now since Oliver passed away, and yet the pain is still as intense as ever. A fot of people say that I need to move on and let Oliver go because he is now happy in hearen, It's easier said than done, Joe. I hate it when people condemn him. I know what he did was wrong, but I can't blame him. Not when it's really my fault.

My friends and family say that I have to look for someone to replace Oliver so that I could forget the pain. But I don't want to, I want to die loving Oliver, the same way that he died loving me. As crazy as it sounds, I still sleep with his shirt beside me every night so that I can feel him beside me. Every week I visit his tomb and talk to him often, as if he's alive.

Joe, please help me. I don't really know what to do about my life now. It's like my world stopped revolving when he left me. Worse, I sometimes even wish for my own death, just so I could see him again.

Apple

Dear Apple,

When we love someone so much we become part of that person, and when that person leaves us, he will always take a part of us with him. We have heard about so many people who decide to take their lives when they feel hopelessly alone and unwanted. Sometimes we are tempted to hurt ourselves to make our partners feel sorry for us and to make them feel bad about what they have done. Sometimes, people go beyond just hurting themselves, and put an end to the life that God has given them. They do this out of extreme pain and desperation. They do this because they have loved, and have been hurt beyond their capacity to bear pain, it is just sad to think that sometimes we can be capable of taking away a life that doesn't belong to us, but was just leased by God to fulfill our purpose here on earth.

Apple, Oliver must have been hurt so badly that he decided to quit life. That was his choice, it is something that he will have to be responsible for on judgment Day.

Don't blame yourself for his death. Remember, every day hearts are broken and lives are shattered. But many of the victims of love choose not to give up and lose hope, for they know that God doesn't give us a test that we cannot possibly bear. No matter how difficult life may seem, there is always hope; there is always a promise of redemption. All we have to do is trust God.

It's been more than a year now since Oliver passed away, and yet, the pain is still as intense as ever

Apple, always pray for Oliver and learn to let go of the guilt that imprisons you. You have to forgive yourself and accept that letting go of his life was his choice, not yours. Do not make the same judgment he made. Be strong and live your life in faith and hope. Teach yourself to love again, just remember that we hold in our hands the capacity to make people happy or sad. We should make the right choice, and be instruments who bring joy and happiness to the lives of the people around us.

Thank you for writing, Apple. I sincerely hope that this will be a time for forgiveness, healing and acceptance in your heart.

HIS is my favorite photo," television host and sportscaster Chiqui Roa-Puno says as she shows me a framed black and white photo of her chubby three-year-old self sitting on her mother's (movie and television actress Boots Anson-Roa)

"Do you remember the house on B. Gonzales?" she asks me wistfully. Chiqui's older sister, Leah, and I had gone to the same elementary and high school in the early '80s. I tell her how different she now looks (from her old chubby self) and she breaks out in a laugh, "Yeah, this is the lightest and fittest I've ever been!" she says. "I guess it's par for the course. You won't feel good talking about fitness and sports if you don't live and look the part." This is one woman who likes to talk, and walk her talk at all times.

In 1982, Chiqui and her three siblings relocated to Northern Virginia, where Boots and broadcaster husband Pete Roa had decided to live a quieter life away from the limelight. "I was in 7th grade then and was your typical American co-ed. At first I had a difficult time adjusting-I looked different, so all the more I wanted to belong. And growing up as a teenager in America can be difficult so I know I gave my parents quite a tough time," she shakes her head at the recollec-

Reconnecting

College at George Mason University, where she graduated with a degree in Psychology (magna cum laude), was a different story. Finally finding herself after the turbulent teen years, she began to reconnect with her Pilipino roots. "I thought to myself, so what if I looked different? All of a sudden I embraced my being Pinoy and started spending more time with the Filipino community"

After graduation, Chiqui worked for six months with the American Academy of Facial Plastic Surgeons, and it was then that she further questioned her life's purpose. "I'm a Pinoy, what am I doing here? Over here, I'm just a statistic. I was doing the 9-to-5 grind and I really asked myself, 'Is this what I want to do for the rest of my life?" It was in late 1992, after 10 years in the United States, that Chiqui decided it was time to come home.

"I inherited both my parents' gift of gab and I realized that I wanted to pursue a career using this gift," Chiqui says. "I also made it my mission to get my parents to think about coming home. Mom was working in a bank, and though she never complained to us about her job, I knew in my heart that she had so much more to offer back home." Chiqui says that initially, it must have been the novelty of living a simple life-taking the kids to school, doing the groceries, cooking for the family—that and brought her parents home with her

must have drawn her mother to the United States. "Not once did she complain to us, but growing up I knew that something was missing," she says.

Thus, when she broached the idea of finally returning home, her parents said yes right away, and this is one "achievement," if one may call it, that Chiqui prides herself in. "If people are happy that my parents are back, I can say that I really had a hand in bringing them both home," she says with a

First and only

Perhaps love also had something to do with Chiqui's return. In 1986, as a bubbly 15-year-old, Chiqui met Robbie Puno, who was then taking post-graduate studies at nearby Georgetown University, "I can still remember how we met. I came in late for dinner that evening. Mom had invited Robbie over to meet the Filipino community and my sister Leah. Well, Leah didn't mind him that night, and we ended up talking the night away. I'm sure it was not at all what my mom had in mind," she laughs at the recollection.

Robbie was Chiqui's first and only boyfriend, and the two were married in 1993. "That year was a milestone for me. I returned home, got married and had my first child, all in a span of 12 monthsi" After 13 years of marriage, Chiqui is now mother to 12-year-old Randy and 10-year-old Nick, whose lives she is very much involved in.

Robbie helped Chiqui land a job as a reporter for Action 9, a current affairs program on RPN-9. "That was such a haptism of fire! I had to speak in Tagulog, and it was reportorial style. I had to learn fast," she relates. Afterwards, Chiqui moved on to channel 5, where she learned the basics of sporstcasting, and then joined Vintage, where her sportscasting skills were further honed.

Live show

Nowadays, Chiqui is busy hosting "It's My Life" on ANC every Friday from 6 p.m. to 7 p.m. It's a job that she feels she was really cut out to do. "The sportscasting helps a lot in a live show because in sports, you call what you see, and you don't have time to plan what you're going to say. You have to be quick. I'm glad that I got that kind of training." Chiqui prepares for her show, which is topic- and not celebrity-based, by reading up on the theme ahead of time. Tust enough so that I don't overstuff myself with ideas and pre-conceived notions, such that I'll be closed to what my guests are saying. I read enough to get into the mood-I owe that to my guests and to my audience."

On television, Chiqui has an easy rapport with her guests, and has the knack for making them feel comfortable and right at home on her TV sofa, whether they're talking about premarital sex or training one's pets. Perhaps the background in psychology has helped.

And how do her parents feel about their daughter, who now lives her purpose out on Philippine relevision? "Dad is my biggest critic and mom is my cheerleader," she says, "Dad telis it like it is and mom gives gentle tips and feedback. I really listen to them because they know what they speak of and they're really very helpful. Their critique becomes the take-off point for our discussions during family dinners on weekends!" Pete and Boots must be so proud to see how far their little girl has come.

"Young people in Japan have personal computers, cellular phones, digital cameras and other electronic gadgets as their best friends," she says. "A group of teenagers who have never met in person would only communicate through their cellular phones and agree to commit suicide together at a scheduled time. These cases are not isolated," she adds.

In one fellowship program, she narrates, a group of Japanese students came over to Negros and were surprised to know that their Filipino counterparts still hold water, land, air and sunlight as the most important things in life.

Dramatic things

Seiko herself has learned to love the Philippines so much because "dramatic things happen here all the time," she says. She wants to continue what she is doing, she says, and values her work because it helps people establish themselves as independent individuals who can make decisions for themselves.

Her work and its results has enabled Seiko to see a better future for the farmers of Negros--where families can eat three square meals every day and send their children to school without borrowing money from anyone; where children can finish their education and practice their profession in their own country; where daughters would not say, "Mapa-Japan ko, mamana ko Hapon (I will go to Japan and marry a Japanese)," because so far, this is the best way they know to improve their lives.

Through JCNC's People's Agricultural Plan (PAP) 21, Seiko helps organize former sacadas to learn the technology of organic farming. She also facilitates networking and cultural exchange programs between Negros and their support agencies in the Asia Pacific Resource Center, PAP21 runs the Tuburan (spring) Technology and Resource Center in barangay Mansilingan, Bacolod City, which facilitates the transfer of technology, like organic farming and vermi-composting, as well as food I SEE STREET STREET, THE SECOND SECOND processing so women can market their products. Parmer-members now number about 1,000.

"Families no longer have to borrow money from anyone for their basic needs because they are able to earn about P200 everyday and P1,000 every week from their gardens alone," says Seiko.

The project has given women more control over the family budget, because they take charge of cultivating their own vegetable plots and selling their produce. Through the Rural Women Exchange Forum, they learn more skills from exposure trips to another family-based organic vegetable gardening project in Cebu, Gender sensitivity training also gives them better self-esteem that has only made them more effective partners in food production.

Seiko's contribution to the social and economic changes in Negros has not gone unnoticed. She has been picked as one of the 27 nominees from the Philippines in the unprecedented global search known as "The 1,000 Women for the Nobel Peace Prize 2005 *

But more than the honor, Seiko considers people as her main reason for staying: "I like people to change together. I want to do something for them because it makes me feel very rich."

Oddly enough, Rico Rosima, Filomena "Faye" Salvador and Belinda Adora began their dancing careers only when they were in their 20s. Yet, they went on to become excellent dancers. So good, in fact, that they went on to become gold medalists in the 2005 Southeast Asian Games dancesport competitions.

Dancesport, a 10-dance competition event in two categories-Standard and Latin-was in the limelight in the recently concluded SEA Games held in Cebu City. Rico and Faye were in the Standard category-waltz, quickstep, foxtrot, and Viennese waltz. Belinda was in the Latin category-cha-cha, rumba, samba, jive and pasa doble.

A handsome couple, Rico and Faye displayed graceful teamwork and dynamic floor craft. Belinda exuded power and charm in likewise claiming the gold.

Winning was most memorable for the three, since this was the first time that dancesport was accepted in the SEA Games. Obviously, dancesport has passed the main criteria for an event to be considered a sport: power, speed and skill.

'You're really good'

Rico, 29, said he appreciated the fact that the sports community has finally treated them as real athletes. "Hey, you are really good, they would say to us," said Rico in Filipino.

A second year computer science student before he became a dance instructor (D.I.), Rico is proud these days of his new calling card, which reads, "Rico Rosima,

For partners like Rico and Faye, life is a daily grind of six to eight hours of dancing. That's why for both, time management is the key.

"Bookings and practice schedules should jibe with that of your partner," said Faye.

Waking up at lunchtime and sleeping at dawn, Paye said, their afternoons from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. are for practice or teaching. From 8 p.m. to 12 midnight, it's "bookings" or dancing with guests.

"Our attitude towards each other should also match," said Fave. "Not only in dancing should we be compatible. If one is not in the mood to dance, or we can't agree on our steps, it's time to end the practice session."

For their regular practice, Rico and Faye set aside at least an hour every other day or at least four to five hours a week. If there's a forthcoming competition, they practice every day for at least two hours.

"It means less socializing," said Faye, "and I still have to do my workout or Pilates every other day."

Rico, who is married (to Amor) and has two kids, Mico and Mica, often has to sacrifice family time in favor of practices or bookings.

"When I arrive, Amor is asleep," said Rico. "When she leaves for school to teach, I am asleep. I see my kids only during lunch time."

Mindset is also important, said Faye.

"Even when competition is still months away, I figure out what to do, program my schedules everyday, plan what to do on the dance floor, focus on practice, and avoid discussions or fights with my partner during practice sessions."

It was par for the course, but it only made us more committed to the movement to get Marcos out of Malacañang and our lives. I was more than ready to risk life, limb, career and future for a better Philippines.

The events leading to Edsa I shaped my political convictions, and the historic four days of the Edsa revolution told me that my idealism was not misplaced. It affirmed my belief that we Filipinos have what it takes to be great.

Greatness and unity

"Magkakapit bisig libo-libong tao, kay sarap pala maging Pilipino... Handog ng Pilipino sa mundo/ Mapayapang paraang pagbabago/ Katotohanan, kalayaan, katurungan/ Ay kayang makamit na walang dahas/ Basta't magkaisa tayong lahat..."

Those words, which spontaneously came out of me as I wrote what became the Edsa anthem "Handog Ng Pilipino Sa Mundo," captured both the greatness and unity that we are capable of when we set aside our differences.

Fast-forward to 2000. The year 1986 seemed so far away, like a half-forgotten dream. In place of the euphoria and optimism, I remember the feeling of being tossed in a sea of uncertainty and despair as we were fed by media with a daily diet of scandal after scandal that characterized Erap's failed presidency and moral weakness. We had undoubtedly taken a wrong turn somewhere, and we were headed for the abyss, which was just around the corner.

It was around then that I applied for migration to Australia. I felt it would be a good opportunity to sit out the Erap years and pursue something the family has always wanted to do-live abroad. I was in my late 40s and I was restless, wanting to try things I've never done before. My decision to move was and remains to be as much about personal growth as it was and is about the disappointment with how our leaders are running the country to the ground.

Before Edsa I, my family actually had green cards to live in the United States. But we surrendered these to the US Embassy in 1989 right after the deadliest coup staged by the military adventurists of the Reform the AFP Movement. After that close call for our democracy, my wife Lydia and I decided to make the statement that we were staying to defend the gains of our newly recovered freedoms from the military predators. We were staking our lives and that of our children to show our belief in, and support for, our new democracy. And to prove it, we closed the escape hatch.

Flabbergasted

I believed then as I do now that sometimes, one must do what one must, even if others think it's crazy. The immigration officer was flabbergasted when I showed up at the US Embassy just two days after the coup ended to return our green cards. He could not fathom why we were doing this when so many Filipinos were willing to give anything for the chance to live in the US.

The way things stood in 2000, however, we felt it was time to seriously consider the option to migrate. To our great delight, we were promptly approved for migration to Australia. We were given a fiveyear window to make the move, but we wanted to leave right away. I was tired and had little enthusiasm for political involvement and causes.

It seemed that we had not learned anything from Edsa I. We had squandered our opportunities for genuine and lasting change. Almost every institution in our midst was faltering and failing its constituents, and I felt deeply let down.

When after Edsa I I had the passion to engage and get involved, 15 years later, I was tired and even doubted whether doing so would change anything. It was Marshall MacLuhan who said that the price for eternal vigilance was boredom. In my case, it was more a case of a flagging spirit, worn out from trying, in my own way, to get the country out of the inertia that it seems to be perennially stuck in. I was becoming too cynical. I needed a break.

But politics aside, leaving was understandably attractive for many other personal reasons. I was eagerly getting into new pursuits-teaching, writing books, photography, scubadiving, giving workshops. And I still wanted to do other things, like pursue further studies, or simply try a different milieu to wake up to and engage. In other words, I was looking for new challenges, new vistas to explore and conquer.

Still hard times

But Edsa Dos intervened and delayed our move. After Edsa Dos succeeded in evicting Estrada in January 2001, we had second thoughts about leaving. But, as things turned out, our hope for change was short-lived. Soon after President Arroyo took over the government, it was clear that we would still be in for hard times. There was the nightmare of Edsa Tres in late April, the relentless assault of the opposition on the newly installed President, and its blind ambition to return to power at any cost. And the scandals that have plagued the Arroyo Good things last forever: Saying "yes" to a new adventure, but staying in teach

On the home front, my mother-in-law was found to have cancer and passed away in less than a year. Shortly after my mother-in-law died, Lydia, who took care of her mother until the end, was herself diagnosed with breast cancer, which forced us to put our move to emigrate on hold indefinitely. Lydia's cancer came as a big shock to our family. We considered the option of her getting treatment in Australia, but we later agreed it would be best to get her treatment here amid the healing company of

Fortunately, she showed positive signs of recovery, but our euphoria was quickly dashed when her father was diagnosed with lung and bone cancer in January last year. We stayed by his side until his death in October.

With the demise of both Lydia's parents and her continuing recovery, we decided that it was time to pick up our plan to move to Sydney, Australia.

> Kind to immigrants

Why Australia? I've always enjoyed visiting the place. As a parent, I always think about what my kids' future will be and constantly worry about their safety. Australia seems like m good place for them to learn to be independent, in a society that is stable, equitable and relatively safe. For starters, the country is kind to immigrants: It provides free education, medical benefits, social services, etc. and is still a decent place to live in.

If the kids find that they want to return to the Philippines later on, it will be their choice. But by moving, we are giving them the opportunity to live in another country and thus be able to make an informed decision.

As for Lydia and me, we are doing this while we are still (relatively) young enough, strong enough and crazy enough to start anew. Do we intend to live in Australia for the rest of our lives? No! We are too hopelessly Pinoy to uproot ourselves completely from this country and society. Our roots are here. Our friends are here and we have spent most of our lives here. We will be back.

Years ago, I explained to a foreigner why overseas Filipinos want to eventually return home. Pirst World countries may have great infrastructure, material comfort and modernity, but these cannot compare with the way the homeland speaks to a Filipino's heart. There may be potholes in the street where I live, but they "speak" to me in a way that a flawless highway in a developed

miliar one, and an easier one to endure

The things that upset me about the country "speak" to me in that same familiar language. In fact, it is so familiar that my sense of humor can run circles around the very things I complain about. But that is precisely the problem: because these have become too familiar, I am no longer moved by them-at least not enough to be able to change things. Indeed, they have become "my" potholes. Life in the Philippines may be hell at times, but it remains our home. Lydia and I are not even selling our house.

I have been asked if I am disgusted with the way things are here. Yes, absolutely, just like everyone else. Am I abandoning the Philippines? No. I am Filipino. One big issue that I grappled with was the possibility of having to give up my citizenship in the course of migrating. I could not picture NOT being a Filipino. I still can't. But with the new law allowing dual citizenship in place, that has stopped being a concern. gardless, know from years of meeting шапу OUL kababa-WIDES abroad that

We will continue to tour abroad, and perform in Manila occasionally, although admittedly, our appearances here will be more limited.

One has to do crazy things every now and then.

I know my decision to leave has stirred some concern among some friends, but I have to do what I have to do. Call it a sabbatical. Or a Jungian call to adventure. Maybe it's just me mid-lifing. But the fact is, there are parts of me wishing to find expression somewhere and in ways I have not tried. Political fatigue has made it easier for me to pursue my personal development. I will return to fight another day.

A wise person once pointed out, "We do not see the world as it is. We see it as we are." Perhaps. When I come back, I shall have acquired fresh eyes and a revived spirit and hopefully, a better appreciation once more of the many blessings of life in the Philippines. With reborn enthusiasm, I can once again jump into the fray and give my heart and soul to the day-to-day task of chipping away at the block of inertia that has characterized our society and brought us so many problems.

I am hopeful that I will want to join the effort once again to try and change things for the better in our country, where Lydia and I intend to live the last to finish at the Waterfront Hotel ballroom. The day of the competition, at B a.m., the partners and their families were at the Sto Niño church, praying.

"I couldn't feel anything then, relax lang ako," Rico recalled. "I said to myself, 'this is it.' All the sacrifices for the country, they will finally be tested."

The reward

When he got his gold medal, Rico was teary-eyed. "I felt like crying, not only for the victory, but for all the sacrifices, pain—and this was the reward, the gold medal," said Rico.

Belinda Adora, meanwhile, said she could hardly breathe before their names were called during the awarding.

"The pressure was just too much to bear because we were hosting the event," Belinda said in Filipino. "Everybody's waiting for you to perform. Grabe. Competing abroad, there's no pressure because nobody gives a hoot about you, about what you're doing.

"That's why, when the Philippine flag was finally being raised after our victory, the feeling was heavenly. I told myself: "That's your Philippines. It wants to be a winner always!"

The following morning, Belinda said she felt the pain—finally. Her body was aching all over.

"All my muscles were aching, especially my feet. My toes, my soles, they were all in pain."

While in competition, Belinda said her energy from the first to the last round was equal for all five dances.

"That's why you need your stamina," she said. "One good thing about dancesport, you are still beautiful while competing—unlike in boxing, where your face gets mauled and rearranged."

Belinda, one of the most disciplined among all dancesport athletes and a long-time veteran of the ballroom scene, has been winning medals in various competitions abroad since 1998. She has even competed three times in that prestigious 77-year-old dance competition in England, the Blackpool Dance Festival.

"In all the competitions I've joined, I sometimes finish second, third or champion, depending on what I dance," she said, "but I was the Asia Pacific champion in 1992.

"I'm too dedicated a dancer. All the things that have no relation to dancing, I drop them all when I'm preparing for a competition. Social life, boyfriend, they take a back seat. I even quit my studies just to concentrate."

Ageless

Ageless and weighing 105 lbs on a 5'2" frame, Belinda is a sight to behold on the dance floor. Her strength and graceful power are unmatched to this day by her peers.

Ê

Her secret, she said, is constant cross training.

"I really work hard and push myself," she said. For the SEA Games, she practiced for

For the SEA Games, she practiced for three hours everyday with Michael Mendoza, her partner.

"I also have my own practice for one hour, and two hours of cross training—gymnastics, aerobics, jazz, gym work, or Pilates," she said.

Luckity, Belinda and Michael, through San Miguel Corporation, were able to get one of the toughest and best coaches in the world, Espen Salber, a Norwegian.

Belinda, in preparation for the SEA Games, had to reduce her teaching workload at her dance studio from 10 hours to four hours. Right now, Belinda is back to teaching at the Savannah Moon Dance Studio. She is also a diligent third year accounting student at the Centro Escolar University.

Teaching is not a stable job, she said, "as students are seasonal." Unlike Rico and Faye, she doesn't earn from bookings. "It's not my calling," she said.

Career after dancesport

Five years from now, she sees herself as an accountant. "I leave it all up to the Lord," she said. "I pray to the Lord to show me what my career will be after dancesport."

For now, she said, she's taking a break from competing. "I spent so much for the SEA Games that I got tired spending," she said with a laugh.

What does she think about the future of dancesport in the country? "We have the style, the passion," said Belinda, "but we are very much behind in training compared to the Europeans who are the best in the world. But if we have kids today that we can train, maybe in the future we'd have a chance to win in the Olympics."

Rico and Paye, on the other hand, are turning professional soon.

"We have nothing to prove here," said Rico, who thinks they have reached the peak of their careers with their victory in the SEA Games.

"Our problem is, we need the money when we compete abroad," he said. "It's always been very expensive competing abroad."

"Five years from now, I'll be 34 years old," Rico said. "I hope I'll no longer be dancing by then, no more bookings. I will just teach."

Faye, however, wants to be one of the best dance teachers in Asia and an adjudicator or judge in competitions. She enjoys teaching, she said, and is known to be good at it. She has also passed her first level of licensing exernance), of which he is a trustee. Lots of big letters, lots of big things to fight for.

He remains a member of the LP's national Executive Council and is teaching political science in both Ateneo and De La Salle. He explains that what he does full-time now is pushing a reform agenda. "I'm hoping that we will succeed in having a pro-people government system of competence and cred fibility, and I still believe that, ultimately, it will happen." He's still involved in advocacies he's always believed in, particularly reforms in education. "I'm very thankful for the opportunity of serving three years in DepEd. The reforms must continue there." As executive director, he is working with a network of volunteer lawyers called Libertas, which works on law reform.

As one who contributed to both Edsa 1 and 2, Gascon says there are similarities and disparities. "In a sense, the leadership in the two Edsas had a lot to be accountable for. There were a lot of aspirations that needed to be fulfilled. In the case of Cory, a significant portion of those aspirations was indeed fulfilled. In the case of GMA, unfortunately, she didn't pursue what she promised to deliver."

Elitist politics

The problem, Gascon says, "is that we have not learned enough from our history." An elitist kind of politics continues to dominate public policy despite the fact that Edsa 1 and 2 were popular uprisings. There are always problems with grafting new ideas unto an old system.

Though the bulk of his time is spent trying to find a way of moving the country through legal and constitutional means, Gascon looks forward to quiet time with his wife. He likes to read, and likes to eat a lot. Someday he'd like to set up a school. "If not, when I retire I'll probably be a taxi driver, and use my taxi as my school, (through) one-on-one sessions with my passengers."

The key to his idea for change is the young ones, the same group he emerged from, more like Theseus rather than Icarus. 'I have faith in our young people. They will respond. It's not yet the time. We need to provide them alternative avenues for their involvement. It can't always be marching in the streets. The challenge now is to present them with alternative avenues of involvement in competition with other distractions which were not present 20 years ago, like the Internet, cable TV, SMS and Friendster. I look as that as a challenge." The people under 20, those who have never seen the dictatorship and what it took to topple it, face some odds. "To them it's tabula rasa, to us it's history. And one of our problems is that we don't have a collective memory. We need to have a collective outrage, and maybe 20 years after Edsa would be a good time to start."

It's a motivation that is further crystallized by the impending arrival of his first child and by the questions of his young students. Gascon is still busy doing the work that comes with making a difference. There is no revolution fatigue for him.

"There are good days and there are bad days. I remain hopeful. It's important to have hope otherwise despair sets in. Looking around me, looking at the young people I teach, I cannot help but be hopeful." Chito Gascon, ESQ, true believer, pauses before continuing. "I'm doubly hopeful because I'm becoming a father myself and I want to be sure that I'm able to give my child a better future than what I've experienced. Will I succeed? I do not know, but I will not be able to forgive myself if I can't tell my child that I tried."

Movers and Shakers

by Ruel S. De Vera

T'S only been a couple of days since he shaved, but Chito Gascon's beard is coming back with a vengeance. The 41-year-old lawyer ditched the beard on his pregnant wife Melissa's request. Truth be told, Gascon, with his quick wit and alert eyes, looks younger without the beard. "It's also so that when she kisses me, it doesn't cause a rash," he explains.

Like his trademark facial hair, Gascon's ideas about social change remain resilient. Twenty years after being part of the first Edsa revolt, the former student leader is spending his time pushing for reform in government against all odds. His is a history filled with acronyms that speak of his heavy political involvement, his being unafraid to do the nitty-gritty work that come with making changes on a wide scale.

Jose Luis Martin Gascon, ESQ, is the eldest of four children of businessman Ramon Gascon and wife Cecille. Growing up, Gascon says he was a quiet child, but made up for it later. He didn't intend to get into campus politics during his high school days at Don Bosco Makati, but wound up heading the Presidents' Council. "I already had an interest in public issues and promoting the interest of my classmates and my school, but not in politics," he explains.

Swept into the issues

Dreaming of being a technocrat, he had originally wanted to become an engineer when he enroled at the University of the Philippines-Diliman.

"When I came into the university, I got swept into the issues of the time, and I questioned myself, my priorities and my contributions to society, questions that young people ask themselves," he explains. He then shifted to Philosophy, which he initially did not realize was a Pre-law course at the time. "It so happened that while I was asking myself questions, political events were unfolding," he recalls.

Ninoy Aquino's death in 1983 found Gascon wading into civil action with such groups as Kompil and JAJA (Justice for Aquino, Justice for All), among others, organizing and rallying all the way into the turbulent 1985 snap elections. "After that, UP was leading the way with civil disobedience, a campaign of disengagement from the Marcos regime." By the time the 1986 Edsa revolt bloomed, Gascon had been elected UP Student Council chairman (incidentally, two of the student councilors were Prancis Pangilinan and David Celdran).

While Gascon and the UP student leaders were meeting to analyze the events, Jaime Cardinal Sin on Saturday, Feb. 22, 1986 called on the people to come to Edsa. Throughout the weekend, Gascon hardly slept and was instead rallying UP students, faculty and staff to join the gathering at Edsa, "We organized college assemblies and mobilized buses to bring them to Edsa and back," he says.

His work as organizer continued after Edsa. Taking a break from school, Gascon was, at 21, the youngest member of the 1986 Constitutional Commission representing the youth. That Constitution, he noted, was a mixed bag, as it had a social reform agenda and was a pro-people piece of legislation but it also "created a political framework, a presidential, bicameral political system which, in hindsight, constrained access to public decision-making for the marginalized."

After returning to school to finish his degree, Gascon worked for the Ateneo Center for Social Policy and Public Affairs for two years. In the spirit of democratic participation, sectoral representatives were named to Congress, and Gascon went to Congress representing the youth in 1990, once again the youngest member. Out of that stint came two noteworthy laws: one creating the Sangguniang Kabataan, and Republic Act 7610 or the Child Protection Act.

Think tank

Gascon later joined the Liberal Party when he decided to move from NGO work to party politics and supported Jovito Salonga's ill-fated presidential campaign in 1992. He then went on to law school at UP as a working student, passed the bar in 1996 and joined the think tank National Institute of Policy Studies (NIPS).

Always someone who looks at the idea of big justice (as compared to the case-to-case work of "small justice") such as international law, Gascon went on to earn his Master's in Law at St. Edmund's College at the University of Cambridge as a British Council Chevening scholar and, once in Cambridge, was named a Cambridge Overseas Trust Scholar.

Upon returning from England, he became NIPS Erecutive Director and founded a law firm with friends. Working with NGOs, Gascon joined the protest movement against former President Joseph Estrada in what would become Edsa 2: "They're both People Power, public out-

Post-Edsa 2, Gascon stayed with NIPS and was part of the government's peace panel negotiating with the leftist National Democratic Pront. In November 2002, he joined government full-time when he was appointed Education Undersecretary for Legal and Legislative Affairs under then-Secretary Edilberto de Jesus. The sensitive post meant Gascon was going over contracts and making sure everything was "No regrets, I was very pleased to have worked with a man who had vision and was genuinely committed to a reform agenda within DepEd," Gascon says. He stayed on under the next Education Secretary Florencio "Butch" Abad, plugging away at the details for change.

'Hello' Garci' rigmarole

But he was growing alarmed with the direction he perceived the Arroyo administration was taking. The "Hello Garci" rigmarole led to the resignation of Abad as part of the Hyatt 10. Gascon submitted his irrevocable resignation the very same day, July 8, 2005. Abad had actually asked him to stay to continue the work at DepEd, but Gascon, who believed in what the Hyatt 10 stood for, felt he could no longer stay. "There was to me, over time, the realization that the President was not committed to the reform agenda that I believed in," he says. "If she were, she would never have appointed Garci in the first place."

And back to the front lines of protest, Gascon returned, as he joined in covening the Black and White Movement as well as the Citizens for TRUTH (Transparency, Responsibility, Unity, Transformation, and Hope).
